THE VIDETTE-REPORTER,

Iowa City, Iowa.

THE close of the year comes apace, and the student looks up and is glad. School days are lively. Break away from home associations, bid companions adieu whose tastes direct in other ways, launch your barque in the scholastic current, and away you go through the years which glide like summer rills. Characteristics of race are but the reflections from the skies on the mind of moody man, but the swiftness of time is gauged by the peculiar avocation of the individual. At this time in the year, the Freshman draws a sigh of relief at "dangers safely o'er," and feels the inward breeding of ambition. The Sophomore assumes more boldness,—the boys resolve to be mighty lawyers, and the girls mighty lawyers' wives. The Junior sends the worn plumes of victory home, tells of what may be, dreams of boat-rides and glory, fills his lanky purse, and cuts a swell; while the Senior—oh, mighty Senior!—careworn, far-famed, chews the cud of wisdom apart, strains his eyes in looking back and forward, in the gathering gloom of twilight looks upward through the sighing branches, and ponders on the vicissitudes of life. Strange quartette of harmony! Weird blending of the undeveloped! Wonderful readjustment of self in the shifting problem which seeks the equalization of confidence and ambition with capacity and strength! Westminster is built on the buried temple of Apollo. St. Paul's towers skyward above the mouldered shrine of Diana. No grander toil, though shrouded in uncertainty and sacrifice, than to build a second self on the ruins of the old.

KEENE AS RICHARD III.

In the present day of enlightened sentiment there are very few to whom the announcement of the coming of a great actor is not a source of gratification. Indeed, it cannot but be admitted that the stage is one of the most potent educational forces in existence. It ranks, in this respect, with history, romance, and the novel. Its field is even broader. History and fiction are at best but vitalized narration, while the drama is life itself. We do not merely scan with the eye the cunning phrases of Iago,—they distill in drops of poison from his living lips. We do not form to ourselves some feeble conception of the pathetic madness of Ophelia; we behold the tender brows bound with "fantastic garlands" and the mind, like

"Sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh."

There are unquestionably many poor actors, as there are many poor novelists and historians; but the principle that would lead one never to attend the theatre on that account, would, in all consistency, forever preclude him from bestowing his patronage anywhere, because he might thereby happen to lend encouragement to some one who did not deserve it.

These reflections have been strongly suggested by the recent appearance of Thomas W. Keene as Richard III. His conception of the character of the artful and bloody Gloster was admirable, and sustained without a break from first to last. Physical deformity, ambition, craft, and ferocity, were all present.

The character of Richard, as drawn by Shakespeare, is not that of a purely bestial nature. There are, in addition to a natural greed for blood, intellectual endowments of a high order: a thorough knowledge of men, the trick of flattering insinuation, and, when the case imperatively demands it, the power of feigning a virtue well. Hypocrisy, however, is not the forte of Richard. He is not thoroughly at home in the role. His villainy is constantly piercing its thin disguise. He is much more a monster than an accomplished demon like Iago or Mephistopheles.

In emphasizing these points, the facial expression of Keene was, indeed, wonderful; a glance or a smile of the real Gloster contriving to escape through every form of dissimulation.

Of individual features in Keene's acting, we were particularly struck with the fierce abandon of his "So much for Buckingham," and with the tent scene, in so far as it pertained strictly to himself. The ghosts bore a painfully striking resemblance to creatures of flesh and blood; nor did the conspicuous presence of an elaborate parlor door on each side of Richard's pavilion lend materially to the suggestion of Bosworth field.

The support in general we should not pronounce first-class. The acting of Mrs. Octavia Allin, as Queen Elizabeth, was fair throughout, and exceptionally fine in the tower scene. Mr. Learock, as Henry VI. and Richmond and Mrs. Gertrude Johnson, as Lady Anne, did passably well. Mrs. Agnes Lee, as Prince of Wales, was too obviously a woman. Indeed, the practice of having a male part thus taken, is, in any case, so little satisfactory that we wonder it is ever followed. As for the Lord Mayor of London and his retinue, we think the less said the better.

Our enjoyment of the play, although somewhat marred by these features, was nevertheless great; and we shall be glad to avail ourselves of many other opportunities of hearing so justly famous an actor as Thomas Keene.

HOW AMERICAN GIRLS KISS.—The Maine Girl, tall and ruddy, kisses as though she were taking an impression in the chewing gum of her native State. The Massachusetts girl kisses in the Greek style, flavored with brown bread. The New York girl goes at it as if she were dabbling in a Wall street speculation. The kiss of a New Jersey is fiery as a taste of apple-jack, better known as Jersey lightning. Little Delaware's girls are as soft as the peaches which grow there. A Maryland kiss is rich and juicy as a terrapin stew. In the Old Dominion you are met with a genuine hospitality; the girls kiss as though they wanted you to stay. The Ohio girl is described as possessing the comprehensive powers of the Ohio man—she wants all she can get and gets all she can. A Louisiana kiss is said to be like eating sugar-cane, while North Carolina girls stick like tar.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Senior banquet came off at the Palace Hotel the last Monday evening of last term. Eighteen couples were present. The class of '82, when Freshmen, as usual, started out strong with sociables in the Observatory; but, after these festive scenes in babyhood, all went their several ways, wandering far and wide in social labyrinths, only to come out into the higher plains of social culture, with inclinations strong and yearning to renew the associations of infancy. What a change has come over the spirit of their dreams! Then, trembling in the malicious glare of Sophomoric devilment; now, treading like warriors over heaps of slain, on the heights of acknowledged superiority. Then, cowering in servile humility, and whispering in caves of despair their tearful woes; now, in the gardens of peace, rejoicing like birds of spring at the success of their journey. The said eighteen couple, after chirping awhile in the parlor, mated and flew to the banquet. After doing justice to the viands prepared by our host, Quinton was elected toast-master, and prepared the following toasts:

- Commencement Prospects—Younkin.
- Valedictorians—Burton.
- Lady Lobbyists—Miss Hess.
- Woman's Rights—Miss Hutchinson.
- Music—Dayton.
- College Poets—Eaton.
- Senior Banquets—Grace Hebard.

The entire evening was so universally enjoyed that visions of many returns flit before the minds of the happy Seniors, and the coming term, we hope, will be gemmed with similar occasions.

To all those who had an opportunity of seeing "Virginius," John McCullough will need no introduction. Since the date of his appearance in Iowa City, he has performed in England, where he met with a most enthusiastic reception. He will again appear before an Iowa City audience on the 18th of this month in "The Gladiator." It will hardly be necessary to assure him of a hearty welcome.

Madame has had her restaurant refitted in an elegant manner—new carpet, new paper, and new paint, and new and larger apartments—where she will smile to meet her festive friends, both new and old.

FREDERIC THE GREAT.

There seems to be a law controlling the human race, which ordains that as there are different positions to be filled, requiring different degrees of mental power and ability, so there are men created to fill them. There are some who are by their nature fitted only to pursue the humbler walks of life, and upon whom all the world's drudgery is heaped. Then there are others, endowed with superior intellectual qualities, who are the acknowledged superiors and leaders of all. When this superiority is unusually marked, especially if it has been turned toward the accomplishment of some great and good purpose, or for the advancement of a nation's glory and fame, we look upon such a man as a genius and a hero.

As we find every race upon the globe with a religious belief of some kind, and believing in some form of a god, so in all races we find this same faculty of the mind directed to the worship of its heroes, or in hero worship. If we glance over the pages of history we will scarcely be able to find a nation which has not produced its hero, whom it holds up to the gaze of the world for its plaudits and praises. Thus Rome had its Cæsar, Greece dwells upon the name of Pericles, Macedonia holds aloft fame of Alexander, Russia owes its greatness to Peter, America looks upon Washington with feelings akin to veneration, France exults in the renown of Napoleon, the Netherlands adore the name of William. But it is Frederic the Great whom the Prussians hold up as the greatest genius in his peculiar line that the world has ever produced.

Frederic the Great was the third king of the then young kingdom of Prussia. A kingdom looked upon with envy by all the other petty German states, and regarded as an insignificant upstart by the powers of Europe. But when Frederic came to the throne, though his resources were small, he determined to let Prussia's name be heard, and to make it one of the foremost powers of Europe; how well he has succeeded, the history of Europe bears ample testimony.

In his youth Frederic was exposed to the severest hardships and cruelties. His father, bigoted, narrow-minded, and morbid, cared for nothing but his money, his army, and his brutish pleasures. He treated his family with such cruelty that at eighteen Frederic determined to run away to England. But his design was discovered, he was arrested and condemned to die; and it was only at the earnest intercessions on the parts of Austria, Saxony, and Sweden, that the old tyrant was at length prevailed upon to spare his life. Reared in such a home as this, with such surroundings, is it to be wondered at that his nature should have become soured and harsh, and that in after life he should not have always showed that courtesy to his companions which was their due?

Notwithstanding the strict care of Frederic's father that he should learn nothing but what would be of practical benefit to him as a future sovereign, Frederic managed during his youth to become a skillful and expert flute player, and frequently gave concerts in which, it is said, he displayed great genius. But, excepting his political aspirations, it was Frederic's ambition to become known and classed as one of the leading French authors of his day. He spent much of his time, not only in his youth, but even in the busiest portions of his remarkable life, in writing and composing poetry. But his poetry lacked the genius that he displayed in the field and in the council chamber. Yet his love of literature and learning was not without its effect; he surrounded himself with the greatest literary men of his day, delighted in their company, and used every endeavor to persuade them to settle in Prussia. He formed schools of learning, and filled them with able and distinguished professors. He encouraged education by compelling attendance at the public schools. And although he himself wrote and spoke in a foreign tongue, yet his literary talents and tasks gave an impulse to German literature; and it was during his reign that Germany first produced anything that it can call its own.

As a statesman and politician he stands pre-eminently foremost of his age. Others may have moved with more caution and achieved a more enviable reputation, but none have shown more judgment and foresight, more determination and energy, more daring and decision, than has Frederic. His foreign policy, though not always just, was yet such as he was able to carry out, and which brought the most good to his native country. That Frederic was an absolute ruler at home, and held the people in an iron grasp, none will attempt to deny. But everything he did, every hardship he made his subjects endure, every dollar he extorted from them, were for the good of the kingdom, and were necessary to him in carrying out his great design of making Prussia the foremost power in Europe. His domestic policy was far in advance of his age. He secured to his people the freedom of speech and of the press. He guaranteed to his subjects a perfect freedom in religious opinions and worship; and though an atheist himself, he encouraged religion because of its beneficial influence. By means of subsidies and tariffs he encouraged manufactures and the production of the raw material. Plainly perceiving that the maintaining of a large standing army was necessary to the furtherance of his political schemes, he practiced the strictest economy in all the departments of his government, in order to support such a large army in such a small kingdom. As a financier and manager the nations of Europe have never produced his equal. No details were too minute for him to notice. Every department of the government was under his own personal supervision and direction. His ministers were but clerks who implicitly obeyed his instructions. Appreciating the advantages of definite laws, he set some of his ablest jurists to preparing a code of the laws of the kingdom; and although it was not completed, yet it was the groundwork of that adopted by his successor. He endeavored to secure complete and impartial justice to all his subjects; and in all cases they were allowed a personal hearing before himself.

But it was as a general and a warrior that Frederic won his greatest renown, and made his name one of the most famous on the pages of history. When he came to the throne he found a small kingdom of but two millions of inhabitants, but a splendidly drilled army of sixty thousand. Inheriting from his father an intense love for military discipline, but freed from his narrow-minded prejudices, he devoted the first portion of his reign to preparing his army for immediate use. He had not long to wait. Scarcely had he got well seated on his throne, when the Emperor of Austria died, leaving his daughter, Maria Theresa, then but twenty-four years of age, to assume control of his extensive dominions, surrounded on all sides as they were with jealous neighbors. The nations of Europe sprang to arms with the intention of dividing Austria among them. Frederic, already prepared, was the first in the field, trying to wrest back from Austria the kingdom of Silesia which belonged to Prussia; and after a short campaign of but four months he returned to Berlin triumphant, recognized by the whole world as the rising king and general of his age. As Frederic was the first in the field, and as he alone was a gainer by the war, he has often been blamed for its commencement. But as Austria had not performed her part of the treaty made by the Emperor to secure his daughter's succession, Frederic did not consider it binding upon himself. And as for his commencing the war, the other nations of Europe would have gone into it even though Frederic had remained at home. Yet the only justification we can give for Frederic's conduct, if such it can be called, is to be found in the fact that it was his ambition to make Prussia one of the powers of Europe, and to accomplish this purpose it was necessary to extend and round out his dominions, and it was with this intention that he engaged in the war.

The experience gained by Frederic in this short campaign served him in good stead; for scarcely had the war ended when the nations of Europe combined for his destruction. One hundred millions of people were pitted against two millions. Frederic, hearing of the combination, waited not to be attacked, but rushed into the territories of his neighbors and took the offensive. But skill was not a match for such overwhelming numbers and exhaustless resources. In a few years he found himself crippled and weakened, his money exhausted, nearly a tenth of his subjects slain, and his capital in the hands of the enemy. But then followed one of the greatest exhibitions of genius that the world has ever witnessed. Collecting his scanty resources, Frederic attacked a superior French army in the west, and in the glorious battle of Rosbach, completely routed it. Turning his attention to the Austrians in the south, within a month after his first victory he defeated them at Leuthen, in one of the best planned battles that has ever been fought. "That battle," said Napoleon, "was a masterpiece. Of itself it is sufficient to entitle Frederic to a place in the first rank among generals." But he paused not, but hastened to the east, where the Russians were laying waste his kingdom; and at Zorndorf, with an inferior army, he completely routed them. Thus, within the space of three months, he had defeated three vastly superior armies of three of the greatest nations of Europe. He saw his fortunes raised from the darkness of despair to the highest pinnacles of success. He saw his kingdom rescued from the outstretched hands of the enemy and placed among the greatest powers of the Old World. The coalition was broken, and Frederic stood unharmed, acknowledged by all to be the greatest general in Europe.

The rest of Frederic's life was passed in the quiet of his kingdom, relieved of the cares of war. He directed his energies toward the strengthening and improvement of his country. And when at length he was called away, he left a strong, prosperous, and united nation, with a population increased from two millions to six, a standing army increased from sixty thousand to two hundred and twenty thousand, drilled and disciplined as never was an army before. It was the pride of Prussia and the dread of Europe. Notwithstanding all the wars in which Frederic was engaged, he never owed a dollar, and left at his death a surplus of fifty millions of dollars in the treasury.

Thus ended the life of the man whose teachings the statesmen and generals of after days have united in following, and whose genius has raised Prussia from a fourth rate kingdom to the foremost power in Europe.

SUCCESSFUL PROHIBITION.

The Maine law went into effect in May, 1851. At that time there were between three hundred and four hundred saloons in the city of Portland. Saloons abounded in every part of the State; taverns kept liquor, and thirty years ago Maine consumed more liquor per capita than any other State. The trade in New England rum was the leading industry. There were seven distilleries in Portland.

In 1852 the Mayor of Portland said:

The law has worked such wonders in ten months as to cause a decrease in the committals to the almshouse 106; the House of Correction for drunkenness, 36. At the term of the District Court in March, 1851, there were 17 indictments; at the term for 1852, 1.

The Mayor of Bangor, in 1852, says:

On the first of July, when I gave notice that I should enforce the law, 108 persons were selling liquors here; 20 of them have left the city. Of the remaining 88, not one sells openly. The number of inmates in our Alms-house and House of Correction have been reduced 103; the number of prosecutions has been reduced 43.

The Marshal of Augusta, reports for 1852:

Augusta had 4 wholesale liquor stores and 25 retail shops. Three of the wholesale dealers sent off their liquor to New York; the remaining firm persisted in selling, until about $1,000 worth was seized. The police used to be called up one hundred nights in the year. Since the passage of the law they have not been summoned once.

Under the date of June 3, 1872, Gen. J. L. Chamberlain, who was Governor of Maine from 1867 to 1871, wrote as follows:

The declaration by many persons that the Maine law is inoperative, and that liquors are sold freely, in large quantities, is not true. The law is as well executed generally in the State as other criminal laws are. We say without reserve that if liquors are sold at all, it is in very small quantities compared with the old times, and in a secret way as other unlawful things are done.

Under date of March 19, 1874, the Hon. Nelson Dingley, who was Governor of Maine from 1874 to 1876, wrote thus:

The prohibitory policy is accepted as a settled fact in this State, and no considerable body of men favor its repeal. In more than three-fourths of the State open dram shops are unknown and secret sales are comparatively rare.

Governor Conner in his message of 1878, in speaking of the prohibitory law says:

It is a matter of common knowledge that our laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors have been very generally enforced, especially in the cities and large towns, where the traffic is most persistently attempted to be carried on in defiance of them.

In 1874 Gov. Dingley said in his message:

The report of the Attorney-General, and the statistics accompanying, conclusively show that the laws prohibiting drinking-houses and tippling-shops have, for the most part, been enforced during the past year more generally and effectively than ever before, and with correspondingly satisfactory results in the diminution of dram-shops and intemperance.

NATURE.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

As a fond mother when the day is o'er
Leads by the hand her little child to bed,
Half willingly, half reluctant to be led,
And leave his broken playthings on the floor,
Still gazing at them through the open door,
Nor wholly reassured and comforted
By promises of others in their stead,
Which, though more splendid, may not please
him more;
So nature deals with us, and takes away
Our playthings one by one, and by the hand
Leads us to rest so gently, that we go
Scarcely knowing if we wish to stay,
Being too full of sleep to understand
How far the unknown transcends the what we know.

wishing to procure a good business education, and a special training that will enable them to secure paying positions, or to conduct their business and accounts systematically, should supplement their Common School, Academic, or Collegiate Education with a Practical Business Course, such as is prescribed by the Commercial Colleges. Educators realize this, hence many of them advertise Business Courses in connection with their English departments. IOWA CITY COMMERCIAL COLLEGE is one of the oldest and the only Commercial College, in this part of Iowa, that gives a complete course. Book-keeping, Commercial Law, Penmanship, Telegraphy, and Short-hand taught by five special teachers. We do not think it best to undertake to teach everything, hence limit the number of our studies to such as are taught by regular Commercial or Business Colleges. A practical Operator has charge of the Telegraph Department. A greater number of our students are securing profitable situations than ever before. Students admitted at any time. 242 enrolled last year. For full circulars and catalogue, address Iowa City Commercial College, Iowa City, Iowa.

LAW DEPARTMENT.

E. B. PARRISH, Editor.

Total enrollment of the class this year, 156.

A report of Law class election will be found in another column.

F. S. Boynton, of Westside, is also ranked with the new recruits this term.

Marcus Kavanagh, Jr., Law class '78, was elected City Solicitor of Des Moines, by a large majority, at the last city election.

Mr. Lewis, '81, who has also just graduated from the Michigan Law School, made the class a pleasant call Wednesday. He was on his way westward.

Chas. H. Merchant, Secretary of class '81, writes from Gratiot, Wis., that he will soon forward a corrected list of the present location of the above class.

Edgar Anderson will remain with the class to the end of the year. Mr. Anderson is a thorough student, an agreeable associate, and will make his mark as a lawyer.

Correction. In the last issue we were made to say: "To such a one, an injudicious process of examination does not become a necessity." Should read "cramming" instead of "examination."

It is currently reported that Argus (eyed) Cox had his watch surreptitiously taken from his pocket Tuesday night, while on his return from spending vacation at Des Moines. Boys, we call time on that report.

The most of the class have returned from their homes greatly refreshed and invigorated by the short respite from their labors. The last term of the year is upon us. It will be a trying one. At the close of this term, examination and graduation. After that, the stern realities of professional life. "Be strong, and quit yourselves like men."

Judge Wright delivered a lecture before the class Wednesday, upon the subject, "Some of the elements of a true and genuine manhood." It was indeed a fine and impressive lecture. It ought to be read once a month by every young practitioner for the first five years of his legal career.

The following new members have enrolled this term: Wm. Fitzpatrick, G. E. French, Mesopotamia, Ohio; C. R. Leonard, Iowa City; and F. W. Paige, Ft. Dodge. Members of former classes returned: C. S. Patterson, '81, Griswold; R. Postom, '80; W. H. Barnes, Downey; N. A. Crawford, of the present class.

Edgar Anderson, R. B. Swift, Fred Smith, O. Robertson, C. J. Traxler, and P. D. Rose, all passed their final examination at the close of last term, in a satisfactory and very creditable manner. The Board of Examiners gave them a three hours' rigid oral examination, out of which they emerged unscathed. Tally six more graduates for the leading law school in the West.

The Board of Regents has decided upon a plan of improvement respecting the Law and Collegiate departments. The general library will be moved into the Chapel building. The Law library will be transferred to the quarters now occupied by the general library, and the partitions of the present law library will be removed, throwing the space into the present law lecture room. The new lecture room will occupy the space of the old hall of Representatives, and will furnish comfortable sittings for two hundred and fifty persons. The next Law class will have healthier, more congenial, and more commodious quarters than former classes. We hope that succeeding classes will grow in proportion in point of numbers.

The reception given the Law class by Prof. McClain, at the close of last term's work, was heartily enjoyed by every person present. The Professor and his estimable lady soon placed their guests at ease, and in a condition for the full enjoyment of the evening's entertainment. Mirth and social converse ruled the hour. Our worthy Chancellor and lady added their genial presence to the occasion. The Law Quartette furnished several pieces of excellent music during the evening. But the mind will weary of the best, and tired nature demand restoratives, and it was soon apparent that our host had not forgotten that Laws, although superior beings, are nevertheless human. A generous collation was served to appetites made appreciative by the exhilarating pleasures of the hour. Thus the moments sped swiftly away, amid the chat and social pleasantries on every hand, while the Fates looked on and smiled as they beheld between professors and pupils an imperceptible web of friendship with its silver warp and golden woof being mysteriously woven, that should bind class and teachers in indissoluble ties. At the proper hour the company adjourned, wishing countless blessings upon our kind host and hostess. Long may fortune continue to smile upon Prof. McClain's hospitable home.

We give below a historical summary of the statistics of the present Law class: Whole number enrolled this year, 149; whole number in this table, 139; the total age is 3,397 years; average age is 24.4 years; the oldest member of the class is J. M. Curry, the youngest, the joy of the class, J. H. Popejoy; the total weight is 21,567 pounds; average weight, 155 pounds; the heaviest man is W. B. (Judge) Allen; the lightest J. S. Coskry. The total height is 804 feet; J. C. Beem beams forth as the beacon light of the class at an altitude of six feet and four inches, while our alma mater is dazzled by the reflected rays of the J. A. Moon at five feet and four inches. There are 59 blue eyed beauties, 38 brown, 37 gray, and 5 black. [N. B. The last five are a natural color; class pugilists not in this grade.] Color of hair: Brown, 47; black, 31; dark brown, 25; light brown, 20; light, 12; auburn, 2; red, 2. Nativity: Iowa, 53; Illinois, 16; Ohio, 12 (not one of 'em holds office; Wisconsin, 12; Pennsylvania, 11; New York, 8; Indiana, 7; New Jersey, 3; Maine, 3; Virginia, Georgia, and Minnesota, 2 each; Massachusetts, California, Connecticut, Missouri, Michigan, Scotland, and Ireland, 1 each. Nationality: There are 122 Americans, 7 Irish Americans, 3 German Americans, 3 Norwegian Americans, 2 Scotch Americans, 1 Welsh American, and one Scotch Irishman. Sixteen of the class have read somewhere that it is not good for man to live alone, have taken the hint, and also taken a superior half, for better or for worse. Exactly one-half of the remaining 123 have doubtless "challenged for cause," and received a modest, sweet-toned "yes," in reply. Part of the remainder, like Achilles, sit sulking in their tents, because, forsooth, some buxom lass, with a cart wheel hat, has answered him "nay," while a bitter remnant, with chicken-hearted palpitations, sit shivering on the fence to watch the merry-hearted, rosy-cheeked angels go by. Ah me! such is life. Now here's to the health of the Republic. Listen! Republicans, 90; Democrats, 28; Independents, 14; and Greenbackers (the party with a railroad pass in its pocket and a flea in its bonnet), 7. Ho, warden! Toll the bell for the burial of king Bacchus. Hark! In favor of the Prohibitory Constitutional Amendment, 101; against it, 30; undecided, 8. The class is an exceedingly moral one.

Its religious belief is as follows: Liberal or no especial choice, 56; Methodist, 25; Presbyterian, 15; Christian, 9; Congregational, 7; Catholic, 7; Unitarian, 6; Episcopal, 5; Baptist, 3; Lutheran, 3;

Universalist, 2; Orthodox 1. The former occupation of the class was variously divided as follows: Students, 45; teachers, 38; farmers, 26; law clerks, 5; clerks, 6; commercial salesmen, 3; editors (overpaid, pampered fellows), stockmen and the much-abused agents, 2 each; grocer, laborer, grain dealer (who sets up the treats), barber (class phrenologist), mechanic, potter, merchant, dentist, and painter, each 1. The class is composed of stalwart young men. It is an honor to the University. We trust that it shall be the Old Guard that shall help to defend, nourish, and sustain in the future, as now the pride of the State, its alma mater.

ADIEU.

Before the issuance of THE VIDETTE-REPORTER next week, class election will have been held. Who will preside over this department, we know not. We have tried, in our humble way, to maintain the reputation of these columns placed in our care. How well we have succeeded we leave our readers to judge. We desire to express our thanks to those who have assisted us; and also to our new found friends connected with THE VIDETTE-REPORTER, for their uniform courtesy and kindness. We lay down our Faber, henceforth to be wielded by an abler and "handsomer man." We have the pleasure of introducing to the audience of THE VIDETTE-REPORTER the new Mr. Editor.

SONG OF THE CAMP.

BY BAYARD TAYLOR.

"Give us a song!" the soldiers cried,
The outer trenches guarding,
While the heated guns of the camps allied
Grew weary of bombarding.

"Give us a song!" the guardsmen say,
"We storm the forts to-morrow;
Sing while we may; another day
Will bring enough of sorrow."

They lay along the batteries' side,
Below the slumbering cannon,
Brave hearts from Severn and from Clyde,
And from the banks of Shannon.

They sang of love and not of fame,
Forgot was Britain's glory;
Each heart recalled a different name,
But all sang "Annie Laurie."

Voice after voice caught up the song,
Until its tender passion
Swelled like an anthem rich and strong,
Their battle eve's confession.

Dear girl! her name he dared not speak,
But as the strain grew louder,
Something upon the soldier's cheek
Washed off the stain of powder.

And once again a fire of hell
Rained on the Russian quarters,
'Midst scream of shot and burst of shell
And bellowing of mortars.

And Irish Norah's eyes are dim
For a singer dumb and gory,
And English Mary mourn for him
Who sang of Annie Laurie."

Beyond the dark'ning ocean burned
The bloody sunset's embers,
While the Crimean valleys learned
How English love remembers.

Ah! soldiers, to your honored rest,
Your truth and valor bearing;
The bravest are the tenderest,
The loving are the daring.
