A QUITE A BREEZE struck our editorial table this week. It blew in from Cornell College over the way, in the form of a bright, windy newspaper, to be issued weekly under the enigmatical name of The Breeze. Judging from the breath-taking energy and hustle of the managers, we may predict a bright future for the young fellow. The Vidette puts forth the hand of fellowship and wishes for its success.

A MOVEMENT has been started by prominent alumni of the University to have a grand reunion of former students at commencement. It is desired that graduates of all departments, and former students who did not complete their courses, be present. This is a capital idea. The associations and ties of college life are the most pleasant of a life-time. "The college course is the cream of life," once said Henry Clay Dean. The college days can be enjoyed but once. After graduation there is but one thing to do, and that is to assemble and live them over again in the imagination. How prettily has Oliver Wendell Holmes put this thought! The boys and girls of to-day want to see and hear the boys and girls of yesterday. By all means let us have a grand reunion.

The friends of the University feel grateful to Senator Kelley and Representative Holbrook for their splendid efforts before the Legislature. These two men are leaders in their party, and they commanded a powerful support for the University. Future generations will call them blessed for the deed. But to President Schaefier, more than to anyone else, is due the honor of the victory. Going before the Assembly two years ago as a stranger, he could do but little. However he was determined to advance the cause of intelligence in Iowa, and his whole aim has been to place the University in its true light before the people. He has lectured, talked, ed, visited, and written wherever and whenever there was an opportunity to help the University. The result is the people are getting a better understanding of the matter. In Dr. Schaefier are combined the best business ability with the highest scholarship and Christian character.

THOUGH the older and larger universi- ties of the East lead in a great many ways, they can take some lessons from some of the younger and smaller institutions of the West, as the following extract from the Yale Courant plainly shows:

- "The fear that the reader of collaborative editorials sometimes finds anything in them to indicate whether the institution from which they spring be pagan or heathen, is not great. They have been as good as they always have been, and are no less necessary now than they have always been. We have no right to be repaid for their trouble. The writer had occasion to visit county institutions in the northern portion of the state, several years ago, and everywhere he went he found an enterprising representative of a certain college, who was making good standing too. Now that is judicious advertising."

- "The principal objection to this plan is that it puts a college or university on a level with the "sane" normal schools and the like. Of this class there are a number in Iowa. We do not refer to those giving a good training for teaching in the common schools and claiming no more. We mean those "sane" schools in Iowa where a man is given a Master's degree in two years after he has gone through the three. Why, if they make one believe that he knows there is to know of chemistry after having studied with their "Professor" for two terms; and where, English, Latin, and American literature are finished in one term under one who teaches six or seven languages; and where "interlinear classics" are better than the "old, hard way." It is beneath the dignity of a good college or university to employ the means used by such "schools." But will not the end justify the means? Hundreds of the best minds in the State are lead to believe that it is of no use for them to go higher after having been ground out at one of these insane institutions. They have their degrees. What more do they need. Plainly it is the business of the colleges and universi- ties to lead such minds out of the darkness of night. Force upon them the fact that they are worse than un- educated, and that they have been basely deceived. Give them a few ideas of that kind and the colleges and universities of Iowa will all be overwhelming. "It pays to advertise" an institution of learning as well as anything else. More printer's ink, gentlemen of the Board.

The Board.

All of the Regents, except Wright, were present when Gov. Boies called the Board to order yesterday morning. The new men are Whiting, of Monona county; Osborne, of Ripley; Stanton, of Centerville; and Abnerth, of Osage. They all bear the mark of unerring busi- ness ability and integrity. A great trust is placed in their hands, and they look to them for a faithful discharge of that trust. The meeting was called for the purpose of taking action in regard to the new chemical labora- tory. President Schaefier was in- structed to examine laboratories and secure plans in the East. The architectural work is to be superintended by Fred Jameson. The building was located on the city park, recently donated by Iowa City. However this location may be changed when the Board next meets, subject to the approval of the Board of Regents. The Board took no action on the Y. M. C. A. building, more than to defer it till the next meeting. In view of the fact that the Association have not definitely decided upon a site themselves, this was the only course the Board could adopt. Regent Thomas Thomas, at the close of his years of service, having tendered his resignation, and Carrol C. Wright was elected to take his place. The new Re- gent is a graduate of the Law Department of the University, and has always been a worthy son of his Alma Mater. Emmn McClain was elected to fill the vacancy in the Law. siden Judge Love resigned. Judge Love still retains his lecturership, to the satisfaction of everybody. A large amount of routine business was transacted. Gov. Boies made a fine impression. The executive committee was in session this morning.

Mr. Lyon is well prepared for the "Inter-State." He has had some excel- lent instruction in Chicago, which greatly strengthened his voice. He will leave for Lincoln the first of next week. Iowa wins this time, and don't you forget it.

- "What about the Y. M. C. A. building?" is a question we hear many times a day. Indeed, what about it? Nobody seems to know what to do. About $23,000 have been subscribed. Why not do something? Buy a lot, start the building and trust to Provi- dence to finish it. Forward, all along the line. Come on, everybody. Let us lay the foundation for a $25,000 build- ing, exclusive of the ground.

FRIENDS.

"A good book is a good friend."—Saint Pierre.

The books we love are friends whose sympathy endures from first undreamed of Time.

From civic history to hard archeology, the arts of thought and knowledge forecast free. And we, search for wisdom, science, art, and politics, as for the soul's part quest of light, worth or choice, divested, in any questions of these friends as heart to heart; between the earth and the sky, in mystery-deepened profound and isolate, to find the serene trustful harmony, attuned to all the human soul's souls dear in the Literary World.

THE STATE: HISTORICAL AND POLITICAL.

The following production was delivered before the Teachers' Association at Hillbrow, Ill., April 11, 1863.

American scholarship has given us little that is better than some of its text-books. Such works as Fisher's Outline of English History, Prout's Practical Elements of Rhetoric, Martin's Human Body, and Young's General Astronomy, are admirable as being something more than "literature of illustration;" they not only instruct, they also inspire.

To this class of scholarly instruction and suggestive books belongs Dr. Woodrow Wilson's work, The State, whose scope is indicated by the subtitle, "Elements of Historical and Practical Politics. A pioneer in this field, Dr. Wilson had to make a clearing before he could build, prepare the mind of the reader for the subject, as well as to present the latter itself. The result is a somewhat bulky volume of seven hundred pages, exclusive of the index and the excellent analytical table of contents. Yet the fulness of the historical explanation makes it possible for the student having but a modicum of previous knowledge and following the steadily the evolution of statecraft in Europe, which is the "land of religions." The "citizenship" is treated of its probable origin, and probable early development, of government. At least among the Aryans, the dominant race in history, the starting point is the fee ilarly ruled absolutely by the father as king and priest. The family widens and becomes a House or gna; but the patriarch is still an absolute monarch. The State rests solely on kinship; its only boundary is blood; its law is inexorable and customary. Though adoption comes to be practiced, those not of kin are, as a rule, aliens and enemies. Where two such families states met, there was war, a war on either side for the preservation and perpetuation of its own customs and religion. The fittest survivors. The vicissitudes of military and political power, the less conscious intertribal imitation complete the process of change amalgamation, and in the first stage of earth's history we have confederations of clans, each class represented by its elder in the national council, which is presided over by a local priest, not by the laws based on his actions, but by the laws based on his actions.

From this point forth well-ascertained facts far outweighs hypothesis; we have only to interpret civilisation, not to reconstruct it also. In Athens democracy arose early. At the grand age of her history begin, the old order has almost wholly disappeared. Citizenship has already taken the place of kinship, and politics become fairly well separated from religion. Not so in Sparta. Here was a garrison of conquerors surrounded by the conquered. The clan spirit is well nigh permanent, and kinship remains the only citizenship until long after Sparta has gained its lasting victory in arms. However, even her kingship very soon became nominal, and the absolute power of the state family became a thing unknown.

But Greece, glorious in that never, becomes more than a bundle of petty states. National government and citizenship began here; but it required a Rome to go a step further and make a state which would mean something to the affairs of the polis, the city. The evolution here is much the same, except that the family is more persistent a unit, and a larger number of Roman families comes closer to the parent family, wholly foreign to the Roman idea, lay the germ of the feudal system, that lordly animal which carries us from the ancient world to the modern. When the Feuston moved southward as a conquering host, leadership became a more imperative necessity, and the leader was enabled to use the conquered land as a means of binding his followers more closely to the warrior received his own city, and the city, the city, the city was the center of the power of the leader, for he had to return service. The fashion spread. Kingship became land ownership, and the process of division continued and threatened national all, but the Church and the oft-times shadowy Holy Roman Empire held men together, till finally national sovereignty was asserted its rightful dignity.

In France, the Duchies of France from the tenth century, blessed with an endless failing, seed grew in power and influence. They became Kings of France, made law after the possession of the crown, until the Bourbon held France, it might almost be said, in fee simple, and Louis XVI., but a century and a half, could say: "I am the State!" Even after a century to its course, and revolutions, France is the most strong centralized of free governments.

In Germany, on the other hand, the states are not as the "puppet government," and endless divisions of estates were the rule. The moral of the bunds of rods had been taken to heart; they combine their strength and both of which wisely husbanded their resources and strengths. The Habsburgs, favored by fortune, grew, in a short time, to unprecedented power, a large portion of which they never tried to lose; they hold still the thrones of Austria and Spain. The Hohenzoelns, once in possession of Brandenburg had military and political giants. By the Achillean resolution, there estates were never to be divided. As a result, this only remained, it. The barbarians took Rome only to give her new life of ease by infusing their virgins, heroic blood into her ficed veins. In turn, the old Rome sent out her body of civil laws to vitalize the legal systems of the continent, if less those of England. The barbarian, co-erected Rome; Rome civilized the barbarians.

But the Roman empire had fallen. The ancient polity with its enlarged families, state of Saxony occupation before Seelte, had become an era of good conditions, who, during the rigor of the Norman rule, only bided their time. William, the Norman, preserved in the spirit of the Common Council, the Wilgeman of the Saxons, constituting this, however, after the feudal fashion, of the great lords, the leas holding over him. This Court gave it all, not the land and its wealth, but the homage of loyalty, of the splendid nuisance from which separated several rings, each to become a body for itself in English political organization, 1252, Edward I., in order to render his taxes less objectionable, had them voted by a Common Council, or Parliament, composed in part of representatives of the lower orders. Later we find these representatives forming a separate House. After that England became a free country as rapidly as her people could educate themselves up to it. To-day, with the bulk of power in the executive and try representative House of Commons, England's government is popular in the fullest sense of the word; English citizenship, indeed, has more fundamental meaning than that of Republik France.

The chapter on the United States demands our special recollection. In the days of multiplying books on civil history, what nations, by the way, is bound and finished separately is fresh, full, scholarly, suggestive. If less well adapted for use with classes of young pupils, it is invaluable to the teacher of history and civics. In no volume of law do we find the relations of state and federal governments so clearly defined; do we find the history of government in the United States so clearly outlined; are we so impressed with the fact that our Constitution is a wise, judicious adaptation, not a brilliant creation; with the fact that our Constitution and our Federal government came into power, not by the ratification of the former by eleven or even thirteen states, but gradually as it became more and more demanded by the growth of citizenship and more earnestness and clearer insight of our citizens that a strong national government is essential for the perpetuity of the states, and the States for the national interest, is made from the Constitution Convention! And yet the facts stand admitted, not only that centuries of political thought and activity had prepared the way for them, but also that nearly a century,—a century of hot debates and profligate bloodshed,—was to pass before its labors were really crowned with success. Time has amply proved their wisdom, but has done so by giving us a legion of noble, gifted patriots, who could make that wisdom speak with the log of deeds.

This is but the barest outline of the eleven chapters of the book. Only the book who will read for himself, written carefully, attentively, and logically can know what can be known, the rise and growth of government,—that which, with religion, has divided man's most serious and earnest meditations, and just as our life is a necessary to the heart that prays, so government, which keeps the body social from dissolution, makes possible that higher life which is the glory of civilization. The author has put into these several chapters and has made some of that solid scholarship which is beginning to be fostered in this country, the student will get from them, first of all, much solid information. But what the student will find from the pages of this book is the fact that the work is well done.

The temptation is great to quote from these chapters about the Nature and Forms of Government, the Nature and Development of Law, and the Objects of Government. But it is must suffice to promise a rich reward to the student coming to these discussions after reading the historical and analytical chapters. The closing chapter is especially to be recommended to those seeking light on the subject of socialism. What we most need in this matter is justice and more rational promises; absurd arguments and de desultory essays would not be enough.

Sam Small, Monday, May 8th.

If you fail to hear Sam Small, you will always regret it. He is one of the most unique characters now before the American public.

Howard North's hatting party last Saturday was a great success. The host had his fine camera and took some excellent photographs of the party.

The Junior class in Political Economy has so far this term been studying Schuyler's Diplomacy, but will hereafter, in connection with it, discuss the principles of Free Trade and Protection.

Julien Richards, class '95, was in the city on business yesterday. Mr. Richards is city editor of the Waterloo Courier. He has been reporting for the Chicago Tribune in Des Moines this winter.

Jimmy Berry is busy with roller and mower on the University campus, and the green sward is already chequered with tennis courts, and the season of this most delightful out-of-doors sport is now opened.

Modern Science and Modern Thought.

With a supplemental article to the Glad star's "Dawn of Creation" and "The True Deni sm's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World.""—By S. L. Aust, Illustrated.—The TH E VIDETTE-REPORTER

We are not surprised to learn of the success of this book, where a sixth edition was demanded within a month from the date of first publication, for a more readable book, we have not seen in a long time. The principal results of Modern Science, and the revolutions they have effected in Modern Thought, are constantly presented, and inquiries into the constitution and composition of the earth and of the universe, into the nature and laws of matter, the development of organised and animated existence, the history of man, the myths of all races and the religions of all peoples, discussions of the forces of motion, electricity, light, and heat. The display is brilliant and instructive. The work is in two numbers—117 and 118. "The Humboldt Library of Science."

We clip the following from the Ottumwa Courier, which speaks for itself. "Fred Orelup, of Iowa City, tell us your history. Here is a ball player for you, and no mistake. Have you ever seen a piece of groundtechnics called the "nigger chaser," how it wobbles about, making you think it is going one direction, and changing its course half a dozen times? Well Fred is a pitcher, and has a regular compound "nigger chaser" curve, which destroys them all. He is twenty-six years of age, and weighs 154 pounds when in his best flesh. Last year he had a batting average of 360 and a fielding average of .990. He pitched at most games last year was 94°. His pitching has attracted much attention throughout the west, but he could not be induced to play professionally, and last year for the first time played in a semi-professional team, where he made a great record. He is a strong hitter as well as a good pitcher. Fred is a son of a rich farmer, and has been at the State University for the past four years, the latter part of the time in the law school. In the University club he has been the terror of the neighboring clubs, and will make a valuable acquisition to our organization."

BASE BALL.
On Monday and Tuesday afternoon of next week, the Cedar Rapids team, of the Iowa-Illinois League, will play the S.U.I. team at this place. The visitors compose a strong aggregation, and our boys must needs hustle themselves, so let everybody turn out and encourage them to win. A large guarantee must be assured to secure the Cedar Rapids Club, and it will be absolutely necessary that a large crowd attend, in order that the management meet expenses. The first games should be well patronized.

BOATS & SHOES.
