A ROWING CLUB

At a meeting of the Athletic Association of the State University, held on Monday, September 23d, a motion was made and carried, to take steps toward the immediate establishment of a rowing club for the University, for the purpose of putting on a crew to compete in any neighboring regattas and with each other universities, and the committee was appointed for that purpose.

The requirements are the procuring of a boat for a house boat and raising $1-00, necessary to fit the boat with house and boats. A proposition has been made which meets with the approval of the Faculty, to raise this sum by subscriptions in the form of stock, say 200 per share, which will make the subscriber a stockholder in the house and boats.

The Rowing Association shall be di-sinct from the stockholders, and shall consist of any member of the University, or stockholder, who shall pay the annual subscription, say 20, and be entitled to all the rights of the club boat, or, if a non-rowing member, shall be entitled to house room for the use of one pleasure boat.

The Rowing Club, or Association, shail hold possession of the house and boats from and under the stockholders, either as lessees, the stockholders holding the title deeds, or by having the deeds made to the stockholders in trust for the Association, with the power to sell and apply the proceeds to the payment of their indebtedness from the Rowing Association, if the latter do not comply with the conditions hereafter set out, or in some manner to be determined upon which shall secure to the stockholders the money advanced.

The Rowing Association shall, out of the annual subscriptions before mentioned, before any other disposition of them, appropriate sufficient, if there be shows, to pay 7 per cent on the money advanced by the stockholders, and a certain sum to be determined by the extent of the membership as a sinking fund to pay off the principal debt.

If the Rowing Association shall fail to comply with these conditions, the stockholders shall have the right to enter and take possession of the house and equipment without other authority than by virtue of the conditions in the deed.

It is estimated that the $1,000 so raised will be sufficient to procure a racing boat, a racing four, two working fours and a working eight, and put up a building sufficient to house them and to house 15 or 20 private pleasure boats for non-rowing members, and will warrant a membership of fifty in the club to start with, thus securing an annual income of $850.

On Monday, September 25d, a committee was appointed by the Athletic Association to confer with the memters of the Faculty as to the best means for establishing a Rowing Club. The following were the committee appointed by the president of the association,

Mr. E. G. Pierce, Mr. A. J. Cox, and Mr.

Herbert Till.

The committee have seen and consulted the following members of the Faculty who have approved of the scheme suggested by the committee, and which is approved to this report, and have also pledged themselves to take stock in the enterprise, viz:

President Schaeffer, Prof. Patrick

Calvin. Anderson, Jameson, McClain

Perkins, Andrews, Wilson, McDonald,

Weld, Loos, Mr. Spautz, and Mr. A.

Anthony.

The committee did not agree to address the other gentlemen in the Faculty before making the report.

The committee suggested that a committee be appointed to wait on two members of the Faculty requesting them to organize the stock company, and that a committee be appointed to rep-nature is real and material, it is, it is "known not seen." Art is ideal, and seems; id est, it is only the idea. As to reality, and the creation. In this field are the greatest as they are the more skilful in producing illusions.

Even though the two fields are thus different, different, the methods of creation are the same in each.

God created man in his own image. In what was not modeled after the "beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, the fish of the sea, or whatsoever passeth through the path of the sea," he was made in the image or ideal of God. As we have seen, the artist must have an ideal, and he is no artist who has none. Quite likely he will be in delusions.

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." As the Lord took a part of the former creation to make the latter, so the artist must find his idea upon Nature, the former form, and, in the process, that his work of art may present the proper illusion to the beholder.

A story is told of a painter commissioned by a king to paint the most human being imaginable. So for weeks he planned and scouted and court, discovered that the artist had painted in his picture the beautiful eyes of the queen, the beautiful smile of a page, and the beautiful features of one courtier after another. Every artist selected beauties from memory, or from his imagination, combined them into one harmonious whole—his ideal. These selective and imaginative powers of the ideal artist.

The crowning part of an artist's work is reducing his ideal to visible form. The proverb is, "A poet is born, not made," but wise Ben Jonson says, "A good poet's made as well as born," and the saying is equally true of all artists. Each must serve an apprenticeship to his art.

Nature is adapted to satisfy the material needs; art, the tastes of man. He, therefore, mistakes the one for the other, who imagines that the grapes which Zenica painted so cleverly as to cause the birds to peck them, were painted for the purpose of feeding the birds; or that "Romans and Juliet" was created for the laudable purpose of inciting the lesson that the passion of love, violent and headstrong as Rome's, is necessarily disastrous in its effects.

In short, art, is, in itself, neither utilitarian nor ethical, it is illusionary and the greatest artist is he who produces the most perfect illusion.

Of late, there has grown up in artist- circles a new sect whose chief tenet is, "Art for art's sake." Not reality, and the creation. In the labor of composition is "to cry out and spare not" the old time worn, covered relics of the art; which they call "ancient." Their chief tenet is, "Education of the school the term, realistic art. They have an indispensable gift to the optate—realize—it more worthy use has ever been made of the term, and they have dragged it from no high pedestal into the dust and glare of the arena, but art!" (Lamartine, "O de la poésie.")

God gave his highest power in creation, and the last and greatest act of creation was the creation of man. For man was made in the image of the great All-father, man is the God-like creature. His attributes are like those of God himself, but man's power is finite, God's is infinite. As creative power is the mightiest attribute of God, so is it of man and earthly power doth show like God's when it is creative power. But man was not made to vie with his Maker in the creation of the actual things of Nature. So far from ordaining sun, moon, and stars, and putting into harmony all the material parts of the universe, mere artists cannot make the tiniest violin which may surpass or even equal "Nature's doings.

He, by science, by research, obtain a full knowledge of Nature and Nature's laws, but the wisest of scientists have created no new thing in Nature. Man has the power of invention. He may harness steam with his iron bands, and by the means of the everlasting lightning, he may grind round about the earth in forty minutes," but the prince of inventors can only utilize the forces of Nature, he is a discoverer not a creator.

There is one domain in which man may exhibit the creative power intrusted to him by the omnipotent Creator. It is the wide domain of Art.

Few men are artists. The poet sings of Milton, "Thy soul was like a star, and dwelt apart." The souls of artists are bright, peculiar stars, and if we view them as they appear in the firmament, a miracle of immeasurable, but if we compare them with the millions of unseen stars, they are but small ones.

The artists soul approaches nearest to the mighty genius of the Maker of the universe. His is the power to reveal himself, in painting, in sculpture, in literature—for literature is but a broad field in the vast domain—and in a thousand lesser forms. And he reveals not only himself—self revelation is not creation—but he reveals something mightier than himself—the ideal which he has conceived. The artist's mission is to bodily forth his ideal as best he can. The artist's power is infinite, his ideal is spiritual and intangible, hence not even the greatest artists have succeeded to their own satisfaction in giving expression to their ideals, but to attain perfection of representation of something, has been the aim of every artist since the days of Apelles of Phidias, of Homer.

There are, then, the two fields of creation, Nature and Art.

FAIR-HAIR.

The library has a number of new publications offered, and the tales of '94's heroic deeds told, retold and again, repair to the sumptuous dining hall, where—in your historian is baffled, he finds not words adequate to portray the scenes. He did not hesitate long, however, for, with his lady, he also found his way to the temptuous repast, and we leave our readers to imagine the rest.

But now for the flow of wit, reason and eloquence. The invocation is pronounced by Rev. Barrett, and the President offers an address of welcome, after which the class of '94 is ably toasting by E. P. Hopkins. Applause follows, and then J. Haddock raises to extol the beauty and virtues of the fair ones of '94; the boys of '94, "sowers in time of peace; defenders in time of war," are then happily toasted by Miss Holt. The Sophie, "the fair last," is then raked over the coals by John Hornby, Class Loyalty, by Miss Collins, and the Class of '94, by Miss Benedict, complete the list of happy, pleasing toasts, and each elicits prolonged applause. A few words by President Schneider closed the exercises.

Dirt Courts.
The question of the S. U. 1's procuring dirt tennis courts is one which should be attended to immediately. Next spring the State Collegiate Field Day will be held in Iowa City. Tennis is becoming the most popular of outdoor exercise. Probably more persons engage in this sport than in any other events which will occur on the program. While foot ball, base ball and other sports have their many admirers, tennis is most generally played, and so the most interested must center in this event.

The S. U. 1's have good tennis material. Noting, however, can be accomplished unless dirt courts are procured, and that as soon as the season is nearing its close. Last June, at Grinnell, our tennis representatives were placed at a great disadvantage, because they had always practiced on grass and were totally unacquainted with skinned courts. Grinnell has ten skinned courts. The rules require that tournaments be played on dirt. If we are compelled to have them next spring, why would it not be advisable for the Athletic Association to take immediate action, and make them this fall? A court must be packed down by several months' playing before it will be in first class order. Why don't we have skinned courts? We can only answer, that it is because no action has been taken.
