Professional Etiquette.

It can certainly offend no reasonable person to be solicitous, and, acting upon this conviction, the Vidette Reporter desires to say a few words to the students of the professional departments upon what resolves itself into a matter of etiquette. It may not be wholly true that the professional students believe themselves to constitute the University, but their actions would indicate as much. However, as far as this point is concerned, we do not care; we are totally indifferent to it. But the Collegiate Department asks the same respect for themselves that they accord to the professional departments. It is no uncommon thing for a number of professional students—and they are generally from one department—to congregate near the South Building and by boisterous conduct disturb the sessions of the literary societies. It is a very common occurrence for professional students to stand in crowds around the campus and jeer at the battalion. Without hesitation we call such conduct a mark of the barbarian. It certainly has no place among those who are so soon to go among the people of the State to help the sick and preserve justice to our citizens. Let us ask if the Collegiate students willfully disturb the lectures of other departments? Do they stand below your windows and annoy your recitations? Well, that is precisely what you do. All this may be thoughtlessness on the part of some, but on the part of others it is downright meanness. It gives a stranger the impression that the University consists of professional departments only. It is our desire to see all the departments treat each other with perfect respect. We should be as equal, and as equals, should dwell in peace under our common University government.

Athletics for Women.

In coeducational institutions the advantages should be shared equally between the sexes. This goes without saying. In the distribution of means of intellectual growth, the University hands it impartially with us both. Women may contest with their brothers the highest ground in the several courses of study. But the one opportunity for physical culture is extended to boys only. Here is manifest injustice. If better means cannot be offered, will those in authority answer this serious inquiry of the most enlightened class of our students. "Why are not girls allowed the privilege of military drill?" The more suggestion there is of anything calls forth a host of objections. Of course I would not for a moment disregard them. I venerate them for their age and their respectability. But I wish to submit a few words in support of my proposition.

The government established a chair of Military Science for the sole purpose of converting our Freshmen into "food for powder." But the state sees in this only a means of physical development. In my opinion results lie within the course of this. It would be surprising if military service were ever required of the boys who are now digging at their military drill. The more suggestion there is on the part of some, but on the part of others it is downright meanness. It gives a stranger the impression that the University consists of professional departments only. It is our desire to see all the departments treat each other with perfect respect. We should be as equal, and as equals, should dwell in peace under our common University government.

The Old, Old Story.

Oh father, dear father, please send me a check.

My books is reduced to "a" form.

And do not forget to see that it is in the name of the old history.

Announce the ubiquitous dim.

Oh father, dear father, please send me a check.

And do not forget to see that it is in the name of the old history.

Anxiously I sit and wait.

For so in my book I am told, and I will do as I was told.

Oh father, dear father, the check has arrived.

Many thanks for the letter and the check.

Now let me start to read, I guess.

For I must now blow and blow tart it all.

A senior nursing his first mustache.

A Vereen maudles in the "mash.

Quack he, called her, "Two birds they rear.

Play base ball, won, and bend the bow;

But, really now, I'll like to know;

If they play fast ball at Vassar?"

He smote a smile that was sharp and keen.

She turned a blush that was hardly seen.

And thought him just a little mean.

Thus trying to surpass her.

A Sophomore blanked a deeper minor.

While the sunlight danced on her golden head.

With an ardent look in her eye, she said, shading slightly in the ground:

"This roughly toughy to tackle and run.

And strike out for base.

But one and three, for the sake of the fans.

At Vassar we do tough down."

The junior left not, nor left his place.

But "tartled" her pandy about the waist.

She whispered, "hold," with winning grace.

And then touched doors for safety.

Juniors Annual.

Junior Annual.

About the middle of its Sophomore year the class of '92 decided to issue a College Annual. This scheme, as the reader knows, has long been a permanent institution of the majority of the colleges throughout the nation. The idea was to be a Junior annual, and as such, and the editors were elected accordingly. Frank Pierce, Edwin Salin, and Kibbel Ingenas were elected managing editors, and a corps of associate editors were also chosen, viz., Geo. Stiles, Edward Dolan, Kate Barber, Harry Kelly, Julia Rogers and William Chanland. The board of editors has been slightly changed since then, owing to various reasons. Our brother, Kibbel, "futu profugus" (and a sneak hill) has changed his state, and gone to seek other pastures green.

Frank Nelson was elected fill vacans, Geo. Cook fills Edward's chair and Frank Russell is Artistic Editor.

The time has arrived when the actual printing of the first Annual ever issued by the State University of Iowa must take a permanent form.

It is with pride that '92 has undertaken the initiative, and with a feeling that the University will be benefited thereby, the editors choose are ready to employ all the energies at their command; but the preparation of the first Annual has more than ordinary difficulties. The task is a Herculean one, and a thankless one at the best. It is to the honor of '92 that this Annual is a success. It reflects on the University if it is not. We will do our best, but we must have help. We solicit contributions from the students of the University, and especially from the men and the junior class. Jokes of "gags," or any little incidents of college life will be welcomed. We want the University interested in this first Annual. Associate editors have been elected who have different departments in charge, and who will see that the publication of the University is represented. Pages are assigned accordingly, and let each department take pride in its "write up." Furthermore we must have money to start on, in view of which we have drawn up the following:

The Business Managers of the Junior Annual of the State University of Iowa will issue 100 shares of stock, guided by these regulations: The shares to be $6.00 each; one-half to be paid on or before November 19th, 1880, and one-half on or before December 16th, 1880. On the issue of the Annual the proceeds therefore to be devoted to the buying up of the original shares at their original value, and for the payment of dividends.

The books of the editors, of course, will be kept to account at all times. It is impossible that the Annual should be a losing investment. Let every one help us to get on a sound financial basis by purchasing at least one share. We must have money to start on. We can furnish mental labor which may be above par in the market, but we are woefully deficient in this world's goods.

Frank G. Pierce, Editor.
Frank Nelson, Managing Editor.

"HALLO" Eve.

Hallowe'en, with the usual amount of discontented sidewalk, missing gates, misplaced cart wheels, and confidence is over. What is the result? Well, the boys have had a little fun, the Freshman has developed a few Sophomore prodigies, and the lusty "specials," loaded with guns, and whiskey, and as harmless as a Spanish man-o'-war, have harvested a goodly furrow from the public funds, together with a very few "kids." The excitement of this time-honored custom is going the way of a scrap, we fear. Beauolan.

In the August number of The Dial there was an interesting article on "The Art of Authorship," written by Prof. Anderson. It is a review of a book compiled and edited by George Bainum, the look consists of a great many numbers of contributions by the leading authors of the day, strung together for the most part in proper order. In his review, Prof. Anderson has given us, in a more or less condensed form, the opinions of some of the contributing authors on the fundamental principles of rhetoric. In conclusion he summarizes the principal rules for the "art of authorship" as he would others them from Bainum's book. These rules are so instructive and so well stated that we will quote them: 1. Be born with the right aptitude, taste, or knack for the art of expression. 2. Read chiefly and widely. 3. Study foreign languages, especially Latin and French, and practice translation critically and assiduously. 4. Learn to think clearly and consecutively. 5. Write and rewrite what you think, and burn what you have written. 6. Combine your mistakes and past experience. 7. Master some subject. 8. This apprenticeship accomplished, where is the expressive phrase of Mrs. Harr, the heart grows "hot behind the pen" you may venture to write for publication. 9. Do not be charmed at failure; try again, harder. 10. From the practical standpoint, you are prepared when the style has really become assured, I derive the least hackneyed nothing, and you are ready to write a goodly pile from the public which developed a few 'skeps,' Is this the way of scraps, the prevalent custom is going the way of the days. Is this the way of scraps, the prevalent custom is going the way of scraps...
