THE BOTANY OF SHAKESPEARE.

By ALFRED KEATS.

In the course of a recent trip through England, the author of this article had the opportunity to study the botany of Shakespeare's works. He found that Shakespeare had a deep appreciation for the natural world and used it extensively in his plays. Shakespeare's knowledge of plants and flowers was remarkably accurate for his time, and the author notes that Shakespeare's use of botany and plant symbolism was often deeply interconnected with the themes and motifs of his works.

The last number of the Critic, the ruling literary publication of New York, contains an interesting review of Geo. H. Rodney's "In Buff and Blue." The fact of interest to University students is that the article is the critique of Professor Wachope, of the English department.

Dr. Wachope has been engaged by this magazine as the chief critic of their literary department. Men of this stature, who are recognized throughout the world in their particular line of work, do more to advance the University than could be done by any other possible means. It is rumored that the Handbook may possibly be ready for the holiday trade against this year.

Chapel Enrollment.

It is with some small amount of regret that the majority of students view the notices announcing the discontinuance of chapel, and that the majority attended by any means, far from it, but there seems to be a prevalent opinion that chapel services give a certain beneficial influence to the University in general and should be maintained. This spirit generally becomes rampant shortly after the Faculty seeks to stop the cavalcade on account of attendance, and many who were total strangers at those deviations will complain about the lack of religious interest to the University, and the general tendency to negligence in such matters.

Institutions exist only as long as there is a demand for them. In a school of the nature of ours, the intangible student body are entirely responsible for the maintenance of these exercises, and however it may reflect upon S. U. I., no one is to be blamed save those who are her patrons and attendants.

Junior Annual.

Last week the Vidette-Reporter published a communication from the editor of the Junior Annual, reprinting the students to send in material for the literary and humorous departments. As was then stated, the literary and humorous endeavors to obtain articles that will enliven some phase of college life. This is a more in the right direction. The Hawkins is "of the students, by the students and for the students," and should contain only such matter that will be of interest to those who are connected with the University. No one wants an Annual for a story book. There are dozens of magazines that publish better stories and cost but a tenth as much. What the students want are pictures of school life—something that in after years will recall their college.

Perhaps the most popular part of the book is the humoristic department. No matter how diligent the editors may be, they must have assistance from others to make a success of their work. Roasts and grinds are always in demand and always acceptable. The success of these two departments will depend largely upon the support and assistance of the students from the various classes. Let everyone do what he can to aid the editors and to make this year's Hawkins even better than those that have appeared before.

Press Room.

In a late number of the Ariel, University of Minnesota, appears a notice of especial interest to University editors and students of forensics. In this notice, dated Oct. 24, warning is given that on Nov. 1st the preliminary contest for selection of intercollegiate debaters will be held. Each contestant is to be allowed 30 minutes in which to present his argument, the six ranking highest to contest against S. U. I. and Wisconsin.

In those few lines may be read the entire history of S. U. I.'s victories and Minnesota's repeated defeats. Instead of a careful and persistent preparation, such as is required with us, a two weeks' notice is given, with the excuse that "students cannot afford to give much time to preliminary work," and need put more time upon the final.

It history teaches any one lesson, it is that Minnesota needs to "hussie up" in some manner, but there might be an honest difference of opinion as to whether it were better to choose men according to the merits of a hastily prepared extemporaneous speech, having no connection with any other speech, or upon their ability to carefully formulate argument, and make the prevalent ideals plainly perceptible throughout all the speeches. Iowa has ever clung to the latter idea, and she has no reason as yet to change her tactics. Trained ability rather than extensive time for preparation has ever been her watchword. See article for full suit.

The Next LECTURE.

Will not be under the auspices of the Lecture Room. Students will have an opportunity of hearing them in the School's assembly. All interested.
