Professor Patrick gives an able paper on "Sleep." The paper of the evening was on "Sleep," read by Dr. Patrick before a large audience.

We investigate last those phenomena which are most closely related to us. The movements of the planets and similar facts were scrutinized centuries ago, but the subject of sleep, that which determines our health and happiness, was not scientifically considered or understood until the last quarter of the 19th century.

In man sleep is naturally regular and normal. In the sleep of the animal a sleep of the animal is used, the statement can be made that both plans and animals sleep at rest at sleep. Sleep is indispensable; the only known exception is in the case of the vertebrae.

During sleep the eyes close, the mouth relaxes, and consciousness is lost. The sleeper is in varying degrees disturbed by stimuli, often turning or moving from the approaching objects.

In dreams are of association and slight sensations from the organs of respiration, digestion, etc. They generally occur near morning and continue to new material. The most refreshing sleep has no dreams.

Breathing is slower in sleep, and only one-eighth so much air is "inhalated.

The temperature falls, the action of the heart slackens, and the characteristic of the circulation changes during sleep.

The brain is a storehouse of nervous energy, and the anaesthetic process goes on during sleep. Fatigue is the cause of sleep, but this does not hold true with all animals. Occasionally there is a sleep which seems to be maintained by the brain.

Too much sleep tends to make a person stupid, but on the other hand a sleep of the animal is used.

The skin of the sleeper is often livid, and the skin of the sleeper is often very dewy.

The deepest sleep is an hour or a half after going to sleep, and is very light the few hours before. Abnormal sleep is not accompanied by restorative processes.

Senior Law class meeting.

The members of the Senior Law class met yesterday afternoon and its president read a paper on the subject of law.

The class will be held at the Cole & Co. The cap and gown question was discussed, but no definite action taken.

The account of the continued absence of Mr. Hardy from school was given by class president, and Mr. Harry Benson seen the unanimous choice, and he was selected.

Mr. Wyckoff tendered his resignation, and Mr. D. T. Young was elected in his place.
