P:;6udo-patrlotl

There are several columns to a comparison of the character of the American and Spanish soldiers. The conclusion was that their own men fought for "patriotism, loyalty and sacrifices of convenience," while "the mercenary Yankees fought merely for the salary they received." Truly, such ignorance is deplorable. The idea that the patriotic outbursts from press and pulpit were prompted by the thought of thirteen dollars a month, hard tack and beans, is preposterous in the extreme. Especially true is this of the various student bodies from all over the land, who have offered to give up school work, all their hopes and ambitions—perhaps life itself—for their country.

From nearly all the colleges and Universities the students have volunteered their services if needed. In some of the schools there have been the most radical and uncalled for demonstrations of Spanish hatred—a pseudo-patriotism that is to be regretted. The burning of the Spanish flag and the effigy of Weyler are acts of unjustified Jingoism. But we nevertheless shun the spirit of the American youth, the determination to defend the stars and stripes at any sacrifice.

The Junior Prom.

There are so few social functions of the nature of the Junior Prom, that all of the society gossips look forward with anticipation to this event. Especially true is it this year, for there have been less dances than usual this season. Hence there has been a mere military ball, and last year there was a Pan-Hellenic.

It is probable that the Prom will be more highly patronized than ever before, and we understand that no pains have been spared, by the committee in charge, to make it a grand success. The class of ’96 has made an enviable record in athletics and other lines, and will endeavor to maintain its reputation in the social line.

The only objection is that the event is not semi-annual instead of annual. It is seldom before the Senior year that all the members of a class get acquainted; simply because there are no social functions where they can meet another. The classes usually hold a reception or give a social once a year, but an evening out of the nine months of school is too short a time to become acquainted. Everyone recognizes the need of general social gatherings, and undoubtedly one of the reasons for the lack of spirit and enthusiasm in the University is that the students seldom get together except at the class-room or literary halls. May the Prom be a success, and future years witness more of such functions.

The students of Simpson recently issued a college song book. Illinois defeated Northwestern, Saturday, by a score of 39 to 7.

Northwestern is reported to have some strong pitching material.

Northwestern will have a new gymnasium to cost between $50,000 and $60,000. At this amount, $50,000 has already been subscribed.
