February Fourth was John Marshall Day at the University of Iowa. Members of the bar, the bench, and the College of Law honored John Marshall's services to the country by addressing students of the University of Iowa, the liberal arts college, and the law school. The occasion was a celebration of the life and work of John Marshall, one of the great jurists of the United States. The address was delivered by Judge W. H. Caner, '99, of the 8th District Court of the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa.

The principal address of the day was delivered by Judge W. H. Caner, '99, of the 8th District Court of the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa. His address was an eloquent and stimulating tribute to the life and work of John Marshall. The climax of this address was a paragraph which read: "In the long, hard years of scholarship and industriousness which followed his undergraduate days, he found the solution of the great problems of the day in the search for truth and justice. The problem of the standing of the British Empire in the world, of the right of a nation to self-determination, of the protection of civil rights, of the administration of justice, of the just distribution of wealth and power, of the maintenance of peace and order, of the conservation of the environment, were his daily tasks. He was a true fighter, a true patriot, a true American, a true citizen, a man who loved his country and served it well."

The Need to Address Student Involvement

The necessity of addressing student involvement in campus affairs is evident. The responses to student petitions and the failure to include students in important decision-making processes highlight the need for greater participation. The recent student demonstrations and protests reflect the growing dissatisfaction with the current state of affairs.

The importance of student involvement cannot be overstated. Students provide a fresh perspective and are closely attuned to the needs and concerns of the campus community. By engaging students in the decision-making process, the university can ensure that policies and programs are more responsive to student needs and expectations.

Student involvement can take various forms, including student representation on governing boards, student input into curriculum development, and student participation in the selection of faculty. By actively involving students in these processes, the university can create a more inclusive and dynamic campus environment.

The benefits of student involvement extend beyond the immediate campus community. A university that values and incorporates student input is more likely to attract and retain students, faculty, and donors. Moreover, a university that prioritizes student engagement is better positioned to contribute to the broader society.

In conclusion, the need for student involvement in campus affairs is crucial. By fostering an environment that values student input, the university can create a more vibrant, dynamic, and inclusive campus community. It is time for the University administration to take proactive steps to ensure that students are fully engaged in the governance and decision-making processes of the institution.

A Future Play
"Private John Allen" as preounced by Charles B. Hartford is not a war play, and neither author nor actor wish it to be classed as such.

The play is a pleasing and interesting one, performed with a distinct Southern atmosphere, and is staged with and the most minute attention to detail. The first act takes place in front of Col. Nat Snow's living while the second and third acts show the interior of John Allen's home.

The time of the play is 1860, and the place, Cadiz Parish Court House in Louisiana. The Mr. Hartford has ever been amiably, and will be presented at the operas house Friday night
