MEDICAL BUILDING

Shortly after two o'clock Sunday morning, the medical building of the University of Iowa was destroyed by fire. Within an hour the smoke had spread a quarter of a mile in every direction. Several thousand dollars will be lost, the exact amount to be determined later after a careful inspection was made. The building was used exclusively for students and for the delivery of the curriculum of the state medical school. It was the only building of the medical schools in the state of Iowa.

The fire started in the north-east corner of the building. Some historical material, which may not be injured by burning, and one thousand pounds of apparatus were burned, but the fire was extinguished before it reached the floor and started the fire. The fire took most of the medical library and some five hundred dollars' worth of apparatus and equipment. The fire was fully under control by noon on Monday, and all the property was saved. The fire originated in the north-east corner of the building.

The fire spread quickly up the stairways and elevator shafts, making it hard to approach nearer than windows and doors, making it hard to approach nearer than those who had gotten it started. The fire was fully under control by noon on Monday, and all the property was saved. The fire originated in the north-east corner of the building.

VARIETY WORK GOES ON

Immediately after the fire, Dean Alexander took a message from the medical faculty to the head of the department that the school was open as usual. The medical building was not damaged, and apparatus was salvaged.

The Variety work will go on as usual until the fire was extinguished.
