TENNSY A DRAMATIST

Samuel Arthur King speaks at the Assembly

"Tennyson is usually looked upon as a lyric poet," said Mr. King, this morning at assembly.

"There are however many strong suggestive traits in Tennyson's writings of this English lyric," said Mr. King.

"There is a distinct preponderance of selections from tragedies, comedies, and dramas, thus giving a wide range to his powers. His characters were few, at no time did he use elevated gymnastics to crowd a multitude upon the stage at once. He was probably at his best in the purely dramatic where delineate gravity and elevation were required as in Buckingham's "Hamlet." Yet the blare and tempest of Anthony's eloquence, and the horror of Clarence's Dream were strongly and vividly brought out. As Shylock he was at his best, and this too without musical or vocal excess.

"Tonight he presents Hamlet the melancholy Dane. It is the greatest and most difficult of the characters of the Shakespearean repertory. It is the king of the present; but like Shakespeare who succeeds best in the strong parts, so King is at his best in the strongly dramatic parts. We predict success for him tonight.

Waste Freshmen Year

One of the weaknesses of college enterprises lies in the fact that in many cases there are no experienced men to conduct them when the places of the leaders are left vacant by graduation or other causes. This is attributable in part to the fact that a great many men do not affiliate themselves early in their college courses with the organizations which have charge of the various student activities. In student life as elsewhere, competency to manage comes only after experience and the upper-classmen who are at the head of the organizations in any college, are those who joined them in their freshman year. It is true that a freshman on first entering college is anxious to join with too great haste and precipitancy, organizations of whose objects and intentions he knows nothing; but this should always be considered in connection with the other fact, equally true and which is sometimes lost sight of, that the sooner a freshman affiliates himself with those organizations with which he is in sympathy and whose work is congenial to him, the greater benefit he will derive from them and the more aid he will be to his society in the later years of his college course.

It is then a matter of importance that freshmen should be given as early as possible all obtainable information regarding the various student enterprises in the university, that they may the sooner choose what line or lines of work they wish to pursue and select the societies that do that kind of work. In some colleges a plan has been put in which accomplishes this to some extent, consisting in assembling all students in convocation early in the fall semester and calling upon the head officers of the various student organizations which are open to freshmen, to describe the general plan and scope of their various societies, the requirements for membership and the methods of gaining admission.

The number of men out for the first indoor athletic practice on Saturday shows that some, at least appreciate the generosity of the regents in renting the armory for winter training. There should however be three or four times as many men out to take advantage of the opportunity. There are certainly more than twenty men in the university who intend to participate in spring athletics and every one of them should be at the practice at the armory at the earliest possible time. If we are to have a creditable track team this spring we must get busy at once.
