SPLIT MILK.

The debacles are over. The late resumed football game has been definitely interred in the records of history, and only its memory remains to spur us on to future efforts. Sweet are the uses of adversity. If we did not have the chance to lose football games, we should have been, we were sporty-minded, and could lose a game without our tempers.

Some criticism has been heard the past few days on Iowa's rooting. We had, instead of forty big-borne, we could not have changed some day's result. The team played a splendid game, and their defeat was an accident. But axes rather swung at us when it came to rooting. In the matter of making noise, the Aggies are finished action. The phone remarks Iowa had no axes were not quite so unanimous and convincing.

The season is over, so far as Iowa spectators are concerned. It is over...all said, and all rooted. An other season is coming, though, and by that time we will have recovered from our sore threats and can once more sit in the gallery chief. This season has taught us something in the line of rooting. We won't forget.
