Lincoln, Neb. Dec. 13—Nebraska won the decisive majority of the questions over Iowa. Iowa admitted the advantage of national supervision of these evils but maintained that the control of the people in the situation is much worse in such a control as a separate police power over these corporations was beyond the control of the federal government.

The Hon. William Jennings Bryan presided and at the close of the debate made a few brief closing remarks.

Iowa’s team was Carl Boyer, Irving Reed and Lawrence Mason.

The affirmative maintained that the question was one of corporate control and not merely a transportation problem. He claimed that while the government passed an inter-state commerce act, the state had control of the corporations. Under exclusive control such matters of public policy, over-capitalization, and similar evils would be properly handled by the state, thus avoiding the failure of the states in handling the situation. The affirmative declared that the federal government was put in charge of such enterprises, and that such centralization was a constructive and practical means.

Mr. Briggs then proceeded to outline some of the reasons for exclusive federal control. The enormous power of corporations has exceeded state control and also that the government must have control of corporations to manage inter-state transportation. The affirmative took the stand that it was necessary for the state to control its commerce.

Mr. Angerstein opened the debate for Illinois. He maintained the interpretation of the affirmative was taking special privilege and was not applicable to state legislation. The negative declared that the affirmative was avoiding the real issue. Mr. Angerstein claimed that exclusive federal control was a more direct and square stand on the question. The affirmative's power was to be left to the people. The affirmative's stand was a practical one. Mr. Starzing claimed that the argument was not taken in a fair and square manner. The affirmative's argument was by the state maintaining and controlling the railroad traffic. The affirmative refused to be put under the federal control.

Mr. Laing held the position as for the affirmative to be under federal control. The affirmative's argument was that the state was not taking the affirmative's stand. The affirmative's argument was that the state's control was a practical method. The affirmative's argument was that the state's control was an attractive proposition. The affirmative's argument was that the state's control was a lucrative proposition. The affirmative's argument was that the state's control was a practical method.

Sorority Discussion: Fall Rushing Rules

Also Decided to Give Girls Dance on January 1

Thursday afternoon the Pan-Hellenic Association of Western Women met and discussed rushing rules for next year. General sentiment seems to favor pledge day, the end of the first quarter or even the end of the first semester, as a possible way of averting the evils of a strenuous rushing season. Social araply may also be considered as a requirement before asking a girl to join a sorority.

Various plans were discussed which will be submitted to the four sororities and decided upon sometime early in the second semester. A Pan-Hellenic dancing party was decided upon for Saturday afternoon, January 11, to be held in the Majestic Hall. The alumni and active members of all national sororities are invited.

Communications

Iowa and Ames

The Daily Iowan,

Iowa City, Iowa,

Dear Editor—Ames title has not only styled the Iowa champions in football for 1941 but five hundred by fair-minded men who love facts and fair play. Why is Iowa allowed to play and win in every game anyway? Iowa's prestige as standard bearer for pure amateurism and a member of the conference college ought not to give Ames privileges. Personally I would be pleased if Iowa discontinued athletic relations with the latter College to at least equalize what they had made proper restitution.

Sincerely,

Tom K. Wohlgemuth, L. V.,

Vesper Laubach, tea costs, and upwards, Verandah.
