ENGINEERING SCHOOL DEVELOPES RAPIDLY

DEAN RAYMOND TELLS OF "WONDERFUL PROGRESS"

Recent Experiment and Curriculum Changes Promote Speedy Development

By Prof. W. G. Raymond, dean of the college of applied science, in response to a question on "The College of Applied Science," the subject matter of the debate, the dean gave the students some idea of the wonderful development of the college in which he is head. The report comes as follows:

"In the summer of 1944 the engineering departments were moved to an old residential building and the hourglass of the old basement and another school room, which had recently been vacated by the department of music, was used for the use of the departments. In all, there were but three rooms. One served as a shop, another as a library, and a third as a lecture room. Later, more equipment was added to the lecture room, and in the fall of 1945, a small laboratory was opened under the supervision of the dean. During the fall of 1945, the dean was able to secure a new laboratory, which was opened at the beginning of the spring term. The laboratory is now being used for the purpose of teaching mechanics, and the equipment is being improved as the work progresses. The dean is hopeful that the laboratory will be opened to the public soon."

PHILHARMONIC DEBATE: "DECISION MAY BE FOUND IN ANOTHER COLUMN OF PAPER"

Full of pupil eloquence and energy, the Philharmonic debate of the "decide my decision" debate which was kind of a "right to be right" proposition, best students ever sold here. The position of the graduate cases was lost from every angle, and there was no place of the problem which the debaters did not bring to the point in their argument. The debate was held in the Liberal Arts auditorium before an audience of representatives of the University, including students, faculty, and friends of the college. Prof. W. B. Morehead of Marshall Law was the presiding official.

The debate was hard fought, every word counted, and the argument was carried through the whole question. It was a brilliant and well-argued debate.

At the conclusion of the debate, the audience heard the final speech of the debaters. The speakers were: E. E. Gagestte, for the affirmative, and W. B. Comedy, for the negative. The debaters were: W. E. Gagestte, G. E. Underwood, and F. G. Page, for the affirmative, and W. G. Raymond, Campbell, and W. B. Morris of Marshall Law. The debate was carried so far that the students in the audience were able to follow every word.

Mr. W. B. Morehead of Marshall Law said:

"The decision of the judges in each of the cases will be found in another column of paper."
