UNIVERSITY OF IOWA OFFERS

One of the greatest changes of the year to the university Department of Surveying has just been announced for the current academic year. Surveys have been made by the railway companies for the purpose of determining the best routes to approach the new city. The work is being done under the direction of Professor J. J. McConnell, Jr., Chairman of the Department of Surveying.

One of the most interesting and important features of the course is the practical work which will be given to the students. They will be required to make surveys in various parts of the state, and will be expected to become familiar with the use of all the instruments and appliances necessary for the work. It is hoped that the course will be of great benefit to the students, and that it will be a valuable asset to their future careers.

The course will be divided into three parts: the first part will be devoted to topographical surveys, and will include lectures on the principles of surveying, field work, and the use of instruments. The second part will be devoted to railway surveys, and will include lectures on the principles of railway surveying, field work, and the use of instruments. The third part will be devoted to civil surveying, and will include lectures on the principles of civil surveying, field work, and the use of instruments.

The students will be required to attend all the lectures and to participate in all the field work. They will be expected to make surveys in various parts of the state, and will be expected to become familiar with the use of all the instruments and appliances necessary for the work. The Rockefeller family had a reputation for generosity and philanthropy, and their wealth allowed them to support various causes that aligned with their values. For example, they were active in the fields of education, science, and public health. The Rockefeller family's efforts to improve public health were particularly notable. They supported the establishment of the Rockefeller Foundation, which worked to combat tropical diseases and improve public health worldwide. The foundation also provided grants to support medical research and education, which helped improve the health of people in many countries.

In addition to their philanthropic work, the Rockefeller family was also involved in the arts. They supported the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Museum of Modern Art, and the American Museum of Natural History. They also provided funding for various cultural and educational institutions, including New York University and Princeton University.

The Rockefeller family's influence extended beyond the United States, as they were active in international affairs as well. They supported the United Nations and other international organizations, and their wealth allowed them to influence policy decisions in various countries.

The Rockefeller family's legacy is a testament to the power of wealth and influence. They used their resources to support causes they believed in, leaving a lasting impact on the world.
