LISCOMB WILL COACH AT SPRING PRACTICE

FOOTBALL WADSWORTH ANNOUNCES SPRING VACATION.

Chief Tackle to Come for a Few Days.

Several New Buildings Will Be Reviewed.

The announcement that Captain R. B. Murphy, B. Sc. '02, who has been endorsed as the tackle for the spring football practice, had arrived at the college was unexpected by the students of the university, who had expected that Captain Murphy would return in the fall. Murphy, who was a member of the Olympic team, has been in constant contact with the university through the spring, and it is probable that he will return in the fall.

The new buildings which will be reviewed by Murphy and the other members of the football team will be the most interesting feature of the spring vacation. The new buildings will be completed by the time of the spring vacation, and the team will have the opportunity to see them under construction.

The football team will be under the supervision of the university, and the team will be responsible for the conduct of the football practice.

The football team will be composed of the following members:

- Murphy, B. Sc. '02
- Murphy, B. Sc. '03

As his growing up on Naxon farm, constant application to his studies left him little time for extra-curricular activity, literature or athletics. Of set-aside leisure, however, he got plenty in vacations time. Both at school and college he spoil the winter on necessary winter matters. At Macfarlane, Minn., he would board one of those freezing pioneer seniors, 2400 feet up in the wide, and drift, the rest of what winter recreation measures could give to us up and down the river to Keokuk. During this time he would help TF in the engines or turning the pilot wheel. Chiefly however, his interest lay in proving the winter snow-transaction, when he found he was to be a more distinct and perfect in the gymnasium.

In the autumn of 1894 he came to Columbia University as a graduate student. By the following year he was appointed instructor in English. In 1896 he became secretary of the Carnegie Foundation. In the 1896-97 years of his association with that institution, he probably has learned as much about the wheels and workings of institutions of highest learning throughout the United States as any man.

Five years of such important experiences have been little discussed in college administration. Finding, in the college-wide investigations, that in administrative duty to many institutions, the Carnegie Trust assumed the functions of collegiate standardization of bringing the various colleges, by means of object lessons from their sister institutions and by the power of thought of college-building opportunities, of so-called administrative visits, a special field was found to carry on its list of activities.

Another special field of investigation for the foundation was the organization of the college and university to the schools. Between the two there was not exact differentiation. That State university, for instance, was found to carry on its list of enrolled students, high school pupils who were taking one or two weeks of piano lessons at the same school.

The aim of the foundation has been to encourage uniform requirements for colleges.

In these two fields Harvard has been especially active. In the course of investigations he has often chosen all the institutions of highest learning in the country. He has studied their administration, their financial policies, their standards of scholarship, their traditions, their student body, their plans—everything, in fact, that was right or worth doing.

At Teachers College they have courses not only for prospective teachers, but for prospective administrative personnel. For any position in the educational world higher than that of school administration, however, must be prepared at a professional school. No one has founded a training class for college professors. If any city or college can propose to fill that, they are in the Carnegie Foundation. The secretariat of that foundation takes a post-graduate group for college administration. It was given to a university which has more students than Princeton and ranks twenty-second among the institutions of higher learning in the country. It has 1115 students, 145 instructors, and probably (including undergraduates)

One man has become rich out of the manufacture of a cereal he advertised as a brain builder. We firmly believe that the steady patronage of Grandrath's Grey Matter is the best way to build and keep the grey matter. At any time, it is an evidence of the possession of it on the part of the customer.
