Curry's Injury Costs Iowa Chance for Game

West's Drop-kick in Last Minutes of Play Swings Game to Visitors—Hanson Stars

Day and gave themselves up to pears. The attendance got several long-distance shots at make their own shirt waists and Nebraska buried under the oblivion after noon was indefinitely postponed to attend once a week. A closer or more of the most agonizing kind. Industry had offered their services as teachers Monday at 4:30 and Wednesday at 8:30 in sewing and embroidery. Between twenty and thirty girls had already started to make their own shirts and skirts and showed off their work. The room was crowded. With Curry's injury, the tide turned in the second half, and Iowa never had a chance for better than a tie after that. The defense may chiefly be attributed to lack of an effective offense. The Iowa defense, except in handling punts, was good enough, although the average speed and the Cornell backs made several good gains through the center. But the offense, although it sputtered the entire time, was especially effective for good plays in the first half and occasionally in the second, was unable to gain constantly and always seemed to give up long and efforts as it neared the enemy's goal. Hanson played the best game of any member of the Iowa backfield. His punting was considered by West and his punts were the best work of Iowa. In the big field, and was individuated to every minute of them all, their work. The number of girls in hospital, with every meeting so far. There is absolutely no charge connected with the tuition and every girl's club is under the auspices of the university is invited to become a member of one or all of these classes. It is a splendid place to meet friends and make friends and to spend a delightful afternoon as profitably as possible.

Curry took the low, and starting, clogging up lines for the first five, then faded. The Hawkeyes rallied, and for the remainder of the first half had all the better of the argument, soaring to scores on the second and third down. At other times the Iowa defense threatened and O'Brien got the Iowa distance short, and missed them all. Then, with Curry's injury, the tide turned in the second half, and Iowa never had a chance for better than a tie after that. The defense may chiefly be attributed to lack of an effective offense. defensive game. He and Malley, who took Curry’s place handled punts wonderfully, failing to catch them cleanly in that second half. Malley scored a touchdown in the second half by a spectacular tackle, and McGin niss did the same thing by a shock ning grab after Curry had fumbled in the first.
Both teams handled considerably and during the first half when the Hawkeyes were playing their game, the dead hand of penalizing was greatly in evidence, as it has been for the past two years. This real the Iowa team sixty or seventy yards all told; but Cornell was set back about as much as the difference was not enough to effect the score.

The fourth quarter opened with a pointing duel between Hanson and West, the big Iowa half getting the better of the three exchanges. From their 10-yard line Cornell kicked and returned on Iowa’s forty. West’s drop failed. Hanson kicked out from the 25-yard line and West kicked return, giving Iowa the ball on the 20 yard line. Cornell again secured the ball on a fumble. Without loss through the line he got forty yard gain.
Iowa’s goal line being saved only by Malley’s tackles. West dropped the ball over for the only count of the game.
