EIGHT STUDENTS SUFFER FROM FIRE

Robert T. Swaine, who graduated from the University of Iowa in 1955, organized the nation's first off-campus company which is expected to compete on an equal footing with Standard Oil. He is now in Oklahoma looking up matters connected with oil wells. Mr. Swaine is a member of a New York law firm which has the charge of the legal end of the new corporation. The competition of Standard Oil has been competing with Rockefeller's monopoly in Europe, and expects to be very successful in this country. In oil holds, extensions are extensive.

Mr. Swaine will be in Iowa City this week, bringing with him his wife, who is a sculptress of considerable renown, and is a niece of Walter Dornach, director of the State College of Design in Iowa City. Mr. Swaine is a Cornell B.A., and went to Harvard after his graduation at Iowa, and for three successive years stood at the head of his law class. In his senior year he was president of the Harvard Law Review Society.

He has been dealing in big matters in New York, his last work being the management of a loan of seven million dollars for a trust company.

THE KNocker

The seeds of a school are its boosters; the liabilities are its knockers. Do we have larger seeds and larger knockers than this sort here in the university? With our boosters still outnumbering our knockers by a large margin, and with an ample supply of the former, is it not likely that when the latter exceed the seeds, our knapsack and have Announced to be published with the utmost speed and attention. Here is the latest from "A School Four Feet".

now what are we going to do with the Knocker spirit at Iowa? The answer is simple: let us boost. Boosting is the battle of the business world, with a sour expression. It is the moral equivalent to knocking. It is the spirit of the bootlegger. It is the spirit of the deletable.

The Knocker is about naught and as dangerous a factor in a university as can be imagined. He knows the faults of the institution, the individual in the coach and the trainer. After a game he always conveys an impression of what was wrong and how it could have been remedied. But did you ever see him get out a full and make good his assertions? He ridicules the faculty in the most uncomplimentary remarks for the services he could have remedied it. But when it comes to making the growth of — and can be difficult to answer a question of person...

Miss KATHERINE P. KING
V. W. C. A. confidential for China representing the Universities of Iowa, Minn., and Neb.

"Another View" is Given (Continued from page 1) basis. Compare these results with those "conjectures" made by our friend, the "student." There should be no mistake in the minds of anyone with regard to the actual value of the hydro-electric plant, simply because it cost the university, just $37,690 to develop it. A careful estimation made recently by former Dean L. G. Weld places the value of this plant at $162,000. Since this is the underestimate value, however, we have preferred to list the actual cost of the development desiring to be absolutely fair in our comparisons. The only real equipment at Ames which is not at present duplicated here is their foundry for the department of mechanical and engineering. But a foundry can easily be established at Iowa at any time, while a hydro-electric plant is an impossibility at the state college. We have not listed for Ames the department of agricultural engineering, since an investigation of this course shows that it relates wholly to the study and setting up of farm machinery, and is a part of agricultural work. These few facts and figures show clearly that the writer of "Another View of the Big Question" made his statements either in dark ignorance or with wilful misinterpretation of the actual conditions. Neither side can be absolved.

The next point which will be taken up for consideration is that of the relative attendance at the two colleges. We expect in the next article to state a few startling facts which have not yet been brought forth.
