"All-in" men at the university of Illinois have united in forming an organization to which all men who have won as 11 athletes are to be members.

An echo of the sadness of our attitude, real social service, such as the present age has needed for, and lacking a sense of the value of the day is held up by the public as the big aim in life. We feel safe in saying that the men, especially those who take the most active part in activities, go out in the world better equipped and bolder contrived to take an unashamed part in the world's work, than they would be after taking any other four year course that is available. We have personally watched men in this college sacrifice possibilities of students who, sacrificing the time which they needed to put them through college, to serve their school, and yet we have noticed during the last few years that the leaders in this spirit of service have been among the best students of the college.

This year the engineers are taking up a new line of work. They are going to play their musical contest in various cities of the state.

A group of twenty-four men are going to devote their entire time during their spring vacation to good work on the road, for the sake of bringing their college closer to the people of the state of Iowa. And what do they get out of it? Merely their expenses. The manager states that every cent made above expenses is to be turned over to a committee of faculty and students to be used in further boosting the college, and because he is an engineer we believe him, and know that personal gain is not a consideration at all in this undertaking.

We want to ask right here: Has the university student body ever undertaken anything of this kind before, without some one planning on it? We believe that this is the first of its kind and it speaks well for the future. In the college of engineering no campaign there is ever announced, so no pre-election promises are made; if someone later, no one runs for office, and therefore no one sends a platform to stand on. The platform of every one who is eligible is taken as granted being the same, and needs no expression. The result is, when an engineer tells us that there is to be no personal gain in a project that involves several hundreds of dollars we believe him implicitly, we see it to be a fact. This is surely an evitable reputation, and we feel the students of the other colleges would do well to emulate the example of the engineers, discard the petty politics, and enjoy the same public confidence which now rests in the student body of the College of Applied Science.

The Iowa Daily Student

Tuesday and on Wednesday of this week he collected information on large and small communities as a part of the work of the Extension division which will be published soon. This is planned to select material from typical districts of different sizes in Iowa, so that the data when compiled and classified will present practical information to the retailers of large and small communities alike.

Graduate students in the university who are specializing in the field of business have been engaged by the Extension division to assist in the work of classifying the facts as they are brought in by Mr. Kurtz and so they are collected through the use of form letters, so that the material may be quickly handled for the bulletins which will be issued to the near future.

CLEANING HOUSE MOVES
The Central Cleaning and Dye Works have leased the room recently vacated by the Arcade store. The20c room will be remodeled and a 10c phone front installed. The managers will place in stock the big line of mild dyes from the Chicago Tailors.

STUDENT ROOM PROVES SPLENDID IMPROVEMENT
UNIQUE FEATURE OF STUDENT LIFE OF ENGINEERS' FACTOR FOR ADVANCEMENT.

Why Engineers Spend so Much Time In Their Own Building—Why Each Man Knows the Room—Why They Are Contained.

Ask an engineer what one phase of his life of his college, aside from the class room work, stands out prominently and the chances are ten to one that he will answer "our student room." The students' room does indeed mean a great deal to the engineers. Space really is at a premium in the applied extension building, but the "powers that be" have decided as soon as it was made known that some professor of his office is by taking of the students' room, and converting it into a class room or laboratory. The building was erected in 1912 and lost to the engineers. Pace really is a great deal, the home tournament will be a splendid thing. Accordingly a pleasant south room on the main floor was fitted up with cushions to sit on, and the students of each engineering department have blessed them for their wisdom.

Here men gather from early morning until some time at night, if an hour between classes, the chances are that he will spend it in this room getting acquainted with some of his fellow students, in visiting or in studying. This is the reason that every man in the college knows almost every other student. This means that the engineers in spite of their heavy work and long hours, are such a congenial bunch. The meetings of the various varsity clubs such as the Conspicuous club, A. S. E. M. E., A. I. E. E. and the Associated Students of Applied Science hold their meetings here. The lockers in the room serve as a student bulletin board, and a place where those artistically inclined may demonstrate their ability in lettering or drawing.

The men take no little pride in the books of the room. There are many pictures on the walls. Photographs of all recent college games have been framed and hung. There are pictures of the parade in mud shoes of spring rains, a large picture of engineering dreams of prominent colleges of the county, and best of all, a picture of their own dean, William G. Raymond. The A. S. E. M. E., has a telephone box and it stationed for the convenience of the students. "These things are of course, mere details," said one. "They are important only as they make the room a place where the man will want to go and meet on a common footing, the other men and their interests. This is what the engineers' 'side-office' is doing for them."
NEW HOSPITAL WING COMPLETES BUILDING

Rooms Will Stop Overcrowded Condition New Proven In Building

Space for one hundred more patients than can now be accommodated will be provided when the new wing addition to the university hospital, now under process of construction, is completed. The wing will be ready for occupancy by the opening of the school year.

One hundred thousand dollars in capital is being expended to increase the facilities of the hospital, for during the two years the building has been in a very crowded condition, owing to the great demand for work called forth by the high quality of service it maintains. Besides the wing at the northwest corner, which will match the one at the east side, a smaller addition is being built in the center between the two that will contain a new kitchen, dining room, and new and more attractive lecture room, being the last story in height while the main wing will remain the same.

On the top of the structure will be a huge sun room, taking the entire floor space, while open air play yards for the small children will be built into the mediatum and service floors. The interior of the building will be of the latest and most modern fashion, and every convenience will be furnished the patients and the staff alike. The use of the wing will be determined by the different sections of the hospital.

With the completion of the new additions the building will be architecturally complete. It is built of the same style and material throughout, and is well arranged, both inside and out. Undoubtedly it ranks in the first class of middle western hospitals, and with its new facilities it is open for business yet a worker of the hospital who has been done without the direction of the staff in the past has been truly marvelous, yet little is known save by those directly connected with it. It is the aim of those in charge to increase the value of the hospital to the state still more in the future.

THE ENGINEERS HAVE A POST OFFICE

Watch Those Line Up for Their Mail Every Tusing-

Day Once a week, regularly, the Engineers play post-office, just among themselves. Somehow they do not seem to care a bit about the game, and a man is always glad to hear about it is in "Play" for him. These letters are little notes from the head of the department with that his work for the preceding week was not quite up to par, and that he has been able to get just a little harder. Somehow these notes seem to have the desired effect, for as soon as they are seen the next two weeks are not too crowded.
