The main objects of this business are to defeat someone, to make students' rates on pressing. let texts must fall back, business.

Neither universities might be hit a costly, injurious, and excessive necessity. To educate the college student by means of athletics would necessarily be a costly, injurious, and excessive necessity. An interesting example of the abolition of intercollegiate athletics is that at Reed College, which has been made practically what it is today through the efforts of President Foster. Here the slogan, "athletics for education" has been adopted. Mr. Foster concludes, "Colleges must lower pressure or later heed that all their athletics must be for education, not for business."

WHY SHOULDN'T THEY DO IT

Last night a sophomore came into

The Iowa office. Here is what he did:

"Tｍor says the freshmen are to order their caps within a day or two, through one of the merchants. It is said, however, that they will not be green ones as is supposed and desired of them, but rather a cap of university or college color. It would be a fine job if the sophomores if they should be allowed to rush their own plans through and spring those prettily colored caps instead of the green one"

BASEBALL MEN ALL OPPOSED

"The ancient baseball rule should be thrown out," Three-cornered of the men who do play professional deny it when the college season opens and play anyhow." This is the opinion of Wayne Potter, captain of the year’s baseball team.

"Hockey Knit, coach of the nine, is of the same opinion, and promptly in favor of carrying away the summer rule," Potter went on to say that all the men he had talked to held his views, and were all of the opinion that the professional player breaks the rule in some manner and plays college baseball. Besides the ball players themselves being against the rule, several close followers of the sport stood up to oppose it. Mr. Phil L. Lene in denouncing it said:

"There are professional players on many teams in the conference as it is, and, besides, the freshman rule takes care of the professional side of it." Many members of the faculty are also against it. As it stands now, there seems to be nobody in its favor. Everybody enjoys a law-out, especially when Breach of Promise is the issue. The Mock Trial by the Brotherhood of the M. E. Church on Wednesday evening, November the third, will carry all the frills without the objectionable features of such a trial.
