Tobacco and the Army

Why deny the boys, who fight at the front, the little comforts we do not refuse the stay-at-homes? There seems to be a certain campaign, conducted through the aid of churches and others, to urge people to cut off tobacco to the boys at the front. Certain narrow-minded moralists argue that it is not good for them; that it would be far better to send them missionaries and bibles. Then there’s a dire hue and cry for a country which purports its young into the fight, as follows: They would have to use the armistice. One thing is certain. These men who oppose sending the boys tobacco, have never smoked. Neither have they the good women who pass resolutions against the use of the “nasty weed” by the soldier boys. For this reason they do not and cannot know what just they will deprive them of by forbidding to send them tobacco. They do not realize the tremendous strain which the men undergo may be nourished by tobacco, as by no other method. The testimony of thousands of those who have lived over the battle-fields of Europe can be offered to show that tobacco is the first thing that the wounded man craves. He is given tobacco, often by the ambulance man, who loses his head, is ordered to relieve the nerves; it is often the only solace of the man who can have no other comfort.

Nor must this be construed as an argument in favor of the use of tobacco. The fact that the discussion of peace at the present time is greatly depressed is no argument against peace. It is merely that the time is inopportune. In the mean time, it can be seen that to forbid our soldiers fighting our battles the solace of tobacco would be a great injustice to them. The man who gives up all for his country is entitled to a great many allowances. Anything that can relieve his condition should be done for him.

The letters from the soldiers will be the best evidence of what the boys want. The boys at the front, and in our armies do want tobacco. Therefore, let us say, let them have it. Our anti-tobacco friends may be right, but let us not lose the lines until the end of the war. This will be the great period of reconstruction. Then, let them take up the discussion of the tobacco problem.

In the meantime it is to be hoped that the much exaggerated gifts of tobacco to the soldier boys will continue.

What Others Think

The Daily Iowans, young men at the University of Iowa, have written the following:

If the policy of a “patriotic student” as outlined by Mr. Lincoln’s “Iowans” was carried out, we would have little soldier public left. There would be no athletic, no football, basketball or other activities because of their expense. Hence, as the government itself advises our colleges to keep up their school activities, we should do our part toward maintaining the traditional “Iowas Spirit.”

Our University band stands for that spirit during the entire year. When our players meet the enemy’s men, our band along with them. If Grinnell can do it, we can do it, and we have one of the best bands in the state. The small amount required of each student, for this purpose, is in no way more than other patriotic enterprises may cost.

The University of Illinois has been sending presents, paper and candy to the football games to raise money for the war effort. Winona will have no Junior press this year. At the annual meeting of the junior class recently, the plan was voted down, and a Liberty loan frame will be substituted. All the proceeds will be turned toward the purchase of Liberty bonds.
