HIGH SCHOOL MEET BEGINS TODAY IN UNIVERSITY ARMORY

Four Games To Be Played This Afternoon and Night Games At 8.30.

PREFERRING ENTERTAINERS VISITS IOWA CITY

A Midsummer Night's Dream decided by four groups and the winner will compete in the semifinals this evening at 7:30.

In the meet of last year's date, the men's event was used for the games, but because it was so much larger than the Iowa City high school team the scores were hardly comparable.

As a result, the high school state board has recommended that, the cross-country team meet be made open to the boys' events, too. The teams will be entered in the gymnastics so that the operators will have as good a view of their team's activities as possible.

From a survey made among the coaches who have been following high school athletics, the writers find that Mr. Patterson, last year's champion, will lead the team this year.

On the basis of the records, one can expect a very close battle to be fought in this meet.

The fixtures are entered as follows:

Two new members added to roll books: James E. Brown, junior, and Ronald Reed, senior.

SYMPHONY CONCERT WILL BE READY IN MAY-RETAIN

Minneapolis Symphony Orches- Structure will appear in Iowa City again this year at the armory on May 4, giving two concerts according to their usual custom, one in the afternoon and one in the evening.

The orchestra, under the direction of Orson Fitcher, is popular for its fine selection and selection of the Iowa City people. Its annual visit is always looked forward to, and the concert will be eagerly anticipated.

The orchestra has been played before larger audiences than this, but in Ia, the people seem to give weight to the opinion that the greater demand for leisure exists than the actual presence of fewer.

The leading and largest agency. (Iowa FREE REGISTRATION. Enroll Minus Rah-rahs that would raise the roof of the Montrose hotel; minus a bunching meant for such college represented; minus ties and shirts and checked cap once that directed to heaves for vengeance; minus superficious fraternity jewelry; in brief, minus every school indication of college "chaps," nearly fifty students of Iowa college arrived here today for the two days' session of the Iowa College Press convention at the Montrose hotel.

"Instead of Fitch's college characters there came to Cedar Rapids a crowd of young men and young women who would be gladly accepted as the most conservative of consumables as good citizens; instead of wild specimens of young America and glidly young things going to college for a husband rather than for an education, there came an organization of semi-professional journalistic editors, hard working and ambitious students of newspapers and newspaper publishers."

That is the way the Cedar Rapids Gazette started its story about the college press convention. When one reads it at first it strikes with it the impression that the "lead" is clever. There is a deeper meaning in the story and it contains a high compliment.

In the first place the facts about the "Missus" material is true. This is found to be a compliment for it showed that in general newspapers and people in general have a different attitude toward college students than they once had.

It may also be interpreted that college students as a general rule have assumed a description along the same line. It is a compliment that students do not follow the old poster pictures and other former caricatures of college students.

But the part which mentions the "various" part is truly indicative of the general attitude in colleges and universities today. President Joseph in his talk before the convention stated that students in those days were serious minded and that particularly since the opening of the war had they taken their work in the best possible way. We believe that they are and we think this deserves an endorsement for it.

"NOW, I WOULD ADVISE YOU—" (Daily Missourian)

A friend was told to another friend who was about to get married, "Don't marry that woman. There's nothing in her to admire. I don't see how you can do it. Don't marry the woman." The friend was thus spoken to turned to the one who had just spoken and said, "You say I have been friends for a very long time. When you have spoken I have listened to you and followed your advice and I thank you for all you are doing. But this is one case in which I do not need any advice. I am and you are going to marry the lady.""We will all give advice and anybody who is asked to give advice. And the greater the advice of all is the advice to be given on advice."

The Talmud, the great compendium of Hebrew learning, says that we should warn anyone who is about to do any wrong. This is a mistake. As intended by the Talmud, would mean anything that the law forbids. This is much enough as a general rule.

But how far will friendship persist in the taking and giving of advice? It is the privilege of great and exalted friendship that we can give to each other views on anything that comes up for consideration. But this way only shall it be given: In a general way and to the multitude and to the multitude of the multitude and to the multitude of the multitude. At first this was the only time dur­ ing all his fighting that he was wounded and near he got shot in the thigh, causing blood-poisoning. The only time that Sergeant Major Maier wished he was back home was when he was fighting the Mohammedan forces. He said, "Those hordes weren't afraid of anything; they would walk right up to a gun and try to cut our heads off—they even cut each other's heads off and called it a 'bad cut' if they missed."

During this time, Mr. Maier fought under General Pershing and he said, "Pershing is the man for the place in this war; he takes care of his men and doesn't send them out unless he knows how things are."

Sergeant Maier admitted that he was born in Germany, but he hastily added that he had come over here when he was 16 and "now I read every time I read a newspaper, I want to see those Germans," he said. "In 1912 I retired from service, but now I think I'll go on again in the mounted cavalry as an officer, as those years were my best," the sergeant added.

LETTERS FROM OUR SOLDIERS

I had expected not to go on duty again very soon, but yesterday morning a hurry up order came in and when I was ready and present at the time, the order was to go out again. The trip took all day. I used my motor as a box to carry officers. Went over—back across the border to where they were to catch me

I started about nine in the morning and delivered a letter at another division on the way. I waited—until the evening train returning, when I had another officer to bring back with me and a reply to the letter.

At the place where I delivered the letter I found a young Frenchman who spoke very good English, and he was delighted to see me. He had done some work at American headquarters on this side. Asked me what part of the States I was from. Then I knew where Carroll, Iowa was. Yes, he knew some young fellows of Carroll and a certain Josh Harterford in particular. And I used to go to the classroom with Jack. Fanciful thing I ever heard of. Of course, we were both delighted. It developed that Jack and the became acquainted when Jack was over here in the American Field Ambulance service before the U.S. got in the war.

The French officers whom I took over to catch the trains were particularly delightful. They, as a class, are much more democratic than the average American officer. It has been much safer, and I carry a blanket with me for warmth. I gave it to the officer in the seat with me but he would have only half of it. One of them spoke a little English and good German. He asked where I learned German and I told him. He talked to me in English as if he had known me forever. What we reached our destination they invited me to have dinner with them before they left. I ate at the table I had served first, I was their guest. And they shook hands with me when they left.

Now I must rush off to supper. Today has not been at all like Sunday for we have been busy all day moving into quarters vacated by the French officers.

Harold Chamberlin.
