FORMER LIBRARIAN DECLARES SOLDIERS APPRECIATE BOOKS

Mr. Malcolm G. Wyer Who Had Camp Experience Says Books Of All Kinds Are Useful.

VOCATIONAL BOOKS ARE IN DEMAND

Men From All Walks Of Life Are Interested In Different Subjects and Books.

If you ar still in doubt as to the kind of books to give for our fighting men, the experience of a man who has had a great deal to do with library work among the soldiers may clear up the matter. Mr. Malcold G. Wyer, formerly librarian here, and at the present time holding a similar position at the University of Nebraska, spent three months at Camp Logan, Texas, organizing the circulation of books at that place. In his report to the American Library Association, Mr. Wyer gives the following information concerning the books in demand by the soldiers and sailors.

Read Much

Contrary to the general impression, the boys do have time to read, according to Mr. Wyer. After the novelty of the new life has worn off, they seek diversion in the libraries. Mr. Wyer believes that soldiers read more than they would in civil life, because they do not have home interests, and social divrsions to take up their time. Mr. Wyer also denies the rumor that soldiers read nothing but the lightest fiction. In fact, in the camp libraries more serious books are demanded than fiction and like material.

Tastes Vary.

Men from all walks of life are found in the army camps. Accordingly, their tastes vary greatly. From the officers to the privates every man is ambitious. To further this ambition books on all vocational subjects are in demand. Modern works on telegraphy, aviation, physics, electricity, gas engines, automobiles, signaling, and medicine are probably the most popular of the technical books. All good fiction and poetry is desired. The following authors seem to make the greatest hit with the men; Rex Beach, Bower, Zane Grey, Richard Harding Davis, Ralph Connor, O Henry, Kipling, Jack London, Conan Doyle, McCutcheon, Booth Tarkington, Stewart Edward White, and Harold Bell Wright.

DILL ASKED TO ASSIST ARMY MEDICAL MUSEUM

The director of the army medical museum in Washington has asked Prof. H. R. Dill to serve on his staff in an advisory capacity. The staff is composed of experts in various lines of research, including Dr. K. C. Wood, and members of the Mayo institute of Rochester and similar organizations. In the museum at Washington will be placed all the material sent in from the various battle fronts of Europe; and it is the intentions of the officials in charge to make this the largest and best teaching medical museum in the world.

The Y. W. C. A. will give a tea party for all University girls this evening at 7:30 o'clock.

BASKETBALL MEN RECEIVE LETTERS

Six Men Awarded "I" While Three Others Receive "I2".

At a meeting of the Athletic Board last Wednesday night, each of the following basketball men was awarded an "I", for their work the past season: Captain Von Lackum, Berrien, Cotton, Brown, Olson, and Brigham. The secondary insignia, "I2" was granted to Jenkins, Pyles, and Freese.

The men who were awarded letters will meet sometime in the near future to elect a captain for next year's team. The choice will probably lie between Berrien, who has played at forward for the past two seasons, and Olson, who has performed at center during the same time.

S. U. I. TO DIRECT RED CROSS WORK

Chapter Course in Home Service to Be Given in Practically Every City in State.

The American Red Cross has asked the extension division of the State University to cooperate with it in putting a chapter course in home service in practically every town in the state with a Red Cross chapter. This will be the most intensive educational Red Cross work ever done in Iowa and nothing like it is contemplated for any other state at present, according to the national authorities of the organization.

Director O. E. Klingaman of the University extension division has been given the task of organizing and supervising the great work. He has sent out over the state a call for volunteers to give the lectures which will be a part of the course. There must be at least fifty persons for this work and a hundred would not be too many, Mr. Klingaman explains.

For these volunteer speakers a conference will be held at the University, probably the second week in April. W. Frank Persons, director general of civilian relief in the United States, and Dr. J. L. Gillen, acting director of the bureau of civilian relief of the central division, will be present during the entire time to help the University authorities to train the lecturers.

The chapter courses which will be given in hundreds of Iowa towns will embrace four lectures, if present plans hold. These lectures will deal with the necessity for home service work, a study of the normal family, and certain items dealing with child welfare. Four persons will take part in every course, one lecture by each. The lectures will be supplemented by conferences and informal discussions.

TAKE PART IN SURVEY

Dean W. F. Russell, head of the college of education at the State University, and E. J. Ashbaugh of the extension division, have begun work on the part which Iowa's University will play in the intensive survey of the school system of South Dakota. These two men, along with a number of other professors and graduate students, will report on the state's high schools and normal schools.

LECTURER URGES BALANCED RATIONS AND VIGOROUS PLAY

Claims That Lack of Proper Food Explains Low Examination Record of Recruits.

RECOMMENDS VIGOROUS EXERCISE

Derides Ancient Calisthenic Work And Urges Strong Resisting Forms of Play.

"I would like to see all the University girls develop the running habit. Running is most beneficial; it makes one breathe deeply," said Dr. Abby Virginia Holmes, who addressed the freshman girls yesterday afternoon, and her assertion was publicly acquiesced to by Dean Klingenhagen.

Dr. Holmes was for sixteen years a practicing physician in Omaha and is now lecturing for social welfare, believing that preventative methods are more important than administering of curatives. She is a native of Iowa.

Food, the balanced ration, with particular stress upon the importance of the mineral salts, was the subject of the first half of Dr. Holmes address to the girls. Lack of proper nutritive food is undoubtedly the source of the low efficiency records of the recruits in the physical examinations. "I have been in four cantonments," said the doctor," and I clearly saw the need of a woman's hand in the planning of diet."

Dr. Holmes derided the ancient, sleepy, methods in calisthenics and recommended vigorous, resisting, physical exercise. Bathing, rest, relaxation, freedom from worry, fresh air, plenty of water were other points emphasized in the talk.

"We should strive to make our lives balanced," she said. "bodily, mentally, and spiritually. We are triuni beings and may be represented by the equi-lateral triangle: absolute balance of body, intellect, and spirit."

SENIOR STUDENT HAS DISAPPEARED

Charles A. Bence, Assistant in Zoology Is Reported Missing.

Where is Charles A. Bence, a Senior in the college of liberal arts, and a member of the West Indian expedition, which Prof. C. C. Nutting is to direct soon?

He paid his $35 to the treasurer of the expedition fund, Tuesday night, $25 as one fourth of the voyage fare; and $10 as an extra assignment, and then went home.

He chatted as usual with his mother at their home, 717 East Jefferson street, and then left, about midnight.

Not giving any warning that he was about to go away, he alarmed his mother and brother, Arthur, a freshman medic greatly, when they discovered in the morning, that he had vanished.

Last night, he returned, and it was found that he had gone to the capital, possibly to attend to financial matters, connected with his education and expedition activities

He departed again, however ,and the family, faculty, friends at large, and the police have been earnestly in quest of him.

BASEBALL CANDIDATES PLAY GAME

Kent Divides Squad and Lets Them Battle for a Few Innings.

Coach Kent divided his baseball candidates into two teams last night and sent them through three or four innings of plays one of the teams resembled last year's combination very strikingly, with Frank catching, Olson at first, Kremer at second, Ehret at shortstop, and Brown and Von Lackum in the outfield. Goodwin performed at third and all of the box candidates were given a trial.

No score was kept but the Yannigans were unable to keep the regulars from scoring or score themselves. The men have not regained their batting eyes yet nor are they up to par in their fielding, but Coach Kent believes that a few more days of outside work will begin to make them look like a real baseball team.

FIVE FROM FACULTY SPEAK AT SIOUX CITY

Teachers Association Which Meets This Week End Has Nine Iowa Alumni on the Program.

Several University speakers will be present at the twenty-fourth annual session of the Northwestern Iowa Teachers' association which is being held at Sioux City March 21, 22, and 23.

Dean W. L. Russell of the college of education will speak before different sections of the meeting Friday and Saturday on "Some Phases of a High School Survey;" Prof. Ellsworth Faris will speak on "Educational Measurements" Friday morning and afternoon; O. E. Klingaman will address the meeting on "Commercial Education in High schools," Miss Bessie McClenahan on "Some Phases of Social Welfare" and Miss Frances Dearborn of the University elementary school on "Indian History Projects."

A number of the others upon the program are graduates of the University or have attended school here. Among them are: Supt. S. T. Neveln, Le Mars; Supt. O. S. Von Krog, Emmetsburg; J. E. Fitzgerald, Sioux City; Supt. F. W. Johansen, Cherokee; Supt. A. M. Deyoe, Des Moines; Supt. E. W. Goetsch, Spencer; Supt. J. R. McAnelly, Sibley; Supt. J. N. Potter, Alta; and Supt. C. H. Type, Fonda.

PLANS NOT DEFINITE FOR FIREPROOFING

How soon operations for the fireproofing and improvement of Old Capitol will begin has not yet been decided. The plans are now in the hands of the architect, and upon his decision will rest in a large measure the determination of when work will commence. Much depends also upon whether or not the desired quality and quantity of steel can be obtained.

DUPLICATES IOWA SITUATION

The last year's high school basketball champions of Indiana were returned victors again this year in a manner much similar to the situation in Iowa. Lebanon was forced to an overtime contest to defeat Anderson by the score of 24 to 20 at the recent high school tournament at the state university. This is the third consecutive scampionship for Lebanon.

LOYALTY MEETING WILL BE BIGGEST ONE OF THE YEAR

Under Auspices of Loyalty League Patriotism Will Be Particular Feature.

WILL BE HELD IN ARMORY SUNDAY

Former Senator Lafe Young Will Speak With Other Prominent Men of State.

Former Senator Lafe Young, editor of the Des Moines Capital, has consented to speak at the Johnson county Loyalty Mass meeting which will be held in the University armory Sunday afternoon, March 31st.

Other orators who have been secured for the occasion include, Hon. Martin J. Wade, Pres. Walter A. Jessup, and Attorney Charles M. Dutcher.

This meeting, under the auspices of the Loyalty league, is planned to be the biggest patriotic turnout Johnson county has ever witnessed. The natural science auditorium will be used for an overflow provision as the armory will only accommodate 2,000 persons. If this proves to be inadequate another hall will be obtained.

Officers Drafted.

The organization of the Loyalty league is unique in that they draft the officers whom they have selected as most competent to do a particular work, in place of asking them for their services. Persons are notified of their appointments and given commands of the work they are to do.

One of the distinctive features of the mass meeting will be that each organization which will be represented is expected to bring a service flag. At a given signal all the flags will be displayed throughout the audience signifying what Johnson county has contributed by way of men for the war.

University Represented.

Prof. G. F. Kay, dean of the Liberal Arts college, is on the committee in charge of the University's interest in the meeting. Prof. W. E. Hays will oversee the music. C. A. Patterson will plan the decorations.

It is the intention of the league to sound the keynote of the great swell of patriotism that Johnson county will display from now on.

SEVEN O'CLOCK CLASSES ARE NOT FAR DISTANT

Eight o'clock classes will really begin at seven o'clock next month!

University students all approve of this plan although it seems like an effort to get up an hour earlier in the morning.

The Women's gymnasium classes will abandon their regular exercises and take up out-door base-ball, tennis and swimming instead. Tennis will be at 8:00 o'clock which will be the coolest part of the day.

The Iowa river will be filled with canoes and row boats until all hours, and here will be an extra hour of daylight to use!

Iowa women recommend 11:00 o'clock house-rules closing instead of the 10:00 because it will really still be daylight at 10:00 p. m.!

ATHLETIC INTOXICATION

"What is well done is done soon enough."

This is a fine old adage, but it's likely to be carried too far and effect a violation of the equally valuable wise words: "Look before you leap."

To prove our point we reproduce a crime which was committed recently in the editorial colums of our good contemporary, the Iowa State Student.

A la Daily Iowan EDITORIAL

(Editor's note: Liking the "stylе" of an editorial recently printed in the Daily Iowan we decided to see if we couldn't get away with it as well as the editorial writer on the Iowan did. Frequent quotations will be used with a different meaning.)

Yes, we've beaten Iowa in another track meet, but we refuse to become excited about it. We regard it rather as a matter of course or a natural happening in the course of events, if you please. Grinnell pushed us a little harder than did Iowa which is also the usual course of events.

(Another editor's note: We won't go on. We don't like that kind of an editorial but we rather felt that we ought to show the Daily Iowan the foolishness of anything along that line for the other fellow is going to have a chance to get it back in a very short time when schools run as close in athletic events as Iowa and Ames.)— Iowa State Student.

Let us examine this little outburst and see if we can determine the ailment of the writer.

It is clear first of all that it is the work of an intoxicated spirit,—a spirit drunk by a wee bit of success. So seldom does Ames taste of victory in contests with Iowa that a meagre teaspoon makes the Aggie student monopolize the sidewalks and expand proportionately her estimate of her own worth.

Instead of waiting as The Daily Iowan did, until she has some real provocation for crowing, the Student has been thoroughly unbalanced by this first little flush of victory. The track season has barely begun, Ames. Remember Iowa's early reverses in basketball. And remember how she came back in the late season games. This isn't boasting nor predicting, merely warning.

In alcoholic drunkenness the period of "I own the world" jubilance is followed by a lapse into a comotose state. We shall watch this conspicuous case of athletic intoxication with more than casual interest to see if there is not something of a parallel in the two kinds of inebriety.

BE A FIGHTER

It is time that we all realize the country is at war. The railroad found themselves relieved of the management of their properties over night. Prices have been set for food and steel and coal. The draft is in full operation. It is no longer a question of patriotism in supporting the government—it is a matter of absolute necessity.

If soldiers should refuse to fight, the war would be lost. If we at home should refuse to buy bonds, the war would likewise be lost because the government would be unable to finance the operation. The student who refuses to buy Thrift stamps or Liberty bonds without good reason in this great crisis is in a class with the soldier who refuses to fight.

WHAT DO YOU READ?

What kind of literature are the students of today reading? Just now "A Modern Instance" seems to be very much in vogue—but that is only one of the novels which is required in a popular English course. But what kind of literature does the average student read—just for pleasure? Probably a daily paper, the Saturday Evening Post and a few modern novels.

A professor in English said not long ago that his students seemed to take no interest in modern problems, with the exception of modern dances. Yet there has been no period in human history in which more has been written on current problems than is being published in magazines today. The air is alive with constructive thinking which is molding the age. the thinking by which the age will be measured in history. On social constructive thought the greatest literature of the world has always been based. Literature is a social product, and any great literature that is being written or that is immediately to be written will be based on the problems and ideals that are absorbing the attention of the world's thinkers today.

There is good literature all about us today. There is bad literature all about us today. Let's be careful in which field we select ours.

CONTEMPORARY OPINION

HORSE FLESH AS FOOD

(Daily Missourian)

Like the intrepid savage eating his first oyster, a score of Columbians have overcome their prejudices and eaten steaks and roasts from a 16-year-old horse which was recently butchered by the College of Agriculture of the University. They pronounced the meat palatable, not delicious or merely edible, but palatable—a sort of a happy medium.

Even before the war many families in Europe ate horse flesh. When the war came with its attendant shortage of food, many others took to this form of meat. Markets for the sale of horse flesh were established and did a flourishing business. In the United States the first market of this kind was heralded over the rest of the country. The movement started in the larger cities of the East and has gradually moved westward.

According to food experts, there is no reason why horse flesh should not be eaten. The difference in taste between it and beef can scarcely be detected and its food value is about as high. The meat is as clean as beef and infinitely cleaner than pork or chicken. Yet the associations which arise when one mentions horse flesh have caused this food to be shunned.

The less civilized peoples are not troubled this way. The Arabs on the desert, when they run out of other food, kill their camels and eat steaks from the hump. When they run out of water, they get water from the stomachs of their beasts of burden.

The aversion to horse flesh is probably the result of the feeling that it is unclean. The reason for the distaste is purely psychological. Economic necessity may change this aversion, but until then horse flesh will probably be looked upon with the usual disfavor.

What Others Think

The Daily Iowan will gladly print and communications from students or faculty members. The writer must sign the article to show his good faith in sending it, but no name will be printed if the sender so designates.

PREPAREDNESS

To the Editor:

The policy of preparedness and watchful waiting is combined in the matter of attendance at lectures. Even at the early hour of 7:40, Monday evening, the auditorium was crowded, the seats all filled by people who, to judge by their "settled" appearance, had been sitting there quite a while.

Why do people go to lectures so early? Yes, I know it is to get a seat. But why go directly after dinner? It is taking an unfair advantage of people who want to get work done between dinner time and the lecture hour.

Why not wait and go to a lecture at the proper time?

The writer shudders to think of what may happen if people continue to go to lectures earlier than every one else. The Jean Vincent Cooper audience was almost entirely assembled by 7:30. Soon, one may as well carry one's lunch in a little box and arrive at the lecture at 6:00 or so.

It might be well to start the policy of attending a lecture just in time to avoid being tardy.

Otherwise, a system of reserved seats may well be started.

CURRIER DANCERS ENJOY NEW MUSIC

Four-cornered Jazz Band Rivals That of Frats, Girls at the Hall Fondly Believe.

Currier hall has an orchestra. Within the confines of the brick dorm are four girls whose music has the pep and the zip that characterizes the popular "Old Mr. Jazz's" wild tunes.

"Traps" consisting of "bells" or in vaudeville called a "xylaphone," played by Fern Wolford, a banjouke played by Vivienne Coady, a ukelele thrummed by Vivian Carpenter, and the piano binged by Lillian Burnett grind out the delectable sounds.

If the S. A. E.'s can sing, and the A. T. O's have an orchestra, why cannot we, too, pay our respects to the musical muse," said the Currier girls. And they did! Any lone-Frosh sauntering past the hall at 7:15 Wednesday could have heard through the zum-zum of the banjo and the ding-ding of the bells the exclamations of enraptured devotees of Terpsichore, and through the open windows he could have seen the dancers animated by a new spirit.

Whether the powers that be are favorable to the introduction of Mr. Jazz into Currier's sacred and dignified precincts remains to be seen. Anyway the girls surely like it!

BOSE RECEIVES FAVORABLE COMMENT

Instructor In Oriental Politics Is Highly Complimented An Work.

This month's issue of "The Political Science Quarterly" contains a review of a book written by Dr. Subhindra Bose Lecturer in Oriental Politics. The comment is extremely complimentary.

The reviewer says in part; "A scholarly contribution to the literature on a highly controversial topic is the monograph of Dr. Subhindra Bose on "Some Aspects of British Rule in India." Though appreciative of the "many solid advantages" of English administration, he differs strongly from the accepted occidental view that "all is well," and produces much convincing evidence to uphold his contention."

After outlining the conditions in the country prior and subsequent to the advent of the English up to 1858, he discusses at length the political development, the judicial system, commerce and industry, the causes of famine, the place of India in the British Empire, and the Nationalist movement.

"From the angle of the ruled it would be hard to find a more temperate and reasonable statement of the factors and forces that are impelling the intelligent classes of the peninsula into the currents of modern thought and progress."

CONFLICTING CLAIMS FOR ALSACE-LORRAINE

Both Germany and France Base Their Claims On Centuries Of Ownership.

Germany lays claims to Alsace and Lorraine because they formed a part of the old German Empire from the tenth to the seventeenth century, when they were lost through the terms of the Peace of Westphalia in 1648 and the latter high-handed appropriations of Louis XIV. By 1870, however, the provinces had belonged to France for 200 years and had become attached to that country because of the freer political development made possible during and after the French Revolution.

The inconsistency in Germany's argument is shown by her insisting on her complete ownership in such provinces as West Prussia and Schleswig which have been in her possession for a much shorter time than 200 years. Her claim really rests on conquest. Von Moltke and the German general staff demanded that in addition to Alsace, with which Bismarck would have been satisfied and which would have brought the German boundaries to the Vosges Mountains, the ceded territory include the fortress of Metz which controls the Moselle valley leading into the rich industrial region of the German Rhineland.

Although according to the German census of 1880, the communes in which a German dialect was spoken out-numbered those in which the language was French—in Asace 811 out of 855, and in Lorraine 411 out of 752—the people as a whole were more French than German in their sympathies and national sentiment. After the French Revolution, French culture had thoroughly permeated the landed gentry and the upper and middle classes of the towns. Recently, however, the people have been drawn to Germany by the economic and industrial advantages offered them because of Germany's protective system and her liberal railroad rate policy; and if Germany had granted complete autonomy within the empire and had restrained her military officials from despotic acts of petty persecution, the people, especially the Alsatians, might have been won over to German sentiment.

In 1915, only two of the representatives in the Reichstag declared for France, the others refraining not so much because of love for Germany as because, to quote Dr. Ricklin, one of the representatives who was also presiding officer of the Alsatian lower house: "The idea of war between Germany and France is so terrible and awful for us people in Alsace-Lorraine that we hardly dare to think of it." The German conduct of the war, however, must have destroyed any growing German sentiment and strengthened the attachment to the French Republic.

DEARTH OF MEN TEACHERS IN IOWA

War Has Caused Shortage, States University Employment Bureau.

The shortage of young men for teaching positions is fairly critical, according to the director of the bureau of recommendations at the State University. This bureau secures positions free of charge for hundreds of school men and women every year and never before has the proportion of men candidates for positions been so low as at present. About fifteen times as many women as men have applied this year.

"The dearth of material for principalship and superintendencies in the smaller towns is particularly striking," the director of this service bureau states. "These positions were usually held by men of military age and in many cases they have left vacancies by enlisting or through the draft.

"Eventually women will be trained to step into these positions, but at the present time most of the women school workers who are eligible by training for this work are already employed. We are particularly desirious or receiving the names of men candidates for positions as principals, superintendents, or science teachers."
