FORTY STUDENTS TAKE TRIP TO QUAKER OATS FACTORY
By Anna R. Martin

Scientific study of the various processes employed in the making of breakfast foods, a bird's-eye view from the observation tower, and an inspection of the late Douglas Ranch works featured the week-end excursion of the home economics class at Cedar Rapids last Saturday.

The party comprised of forty summer session students, under the charge of Bruce E. Mahan, left Iowa City on the 7:35 interurban car, arriving in Cedar Rapids at 8:30 o'clock. Upon arriving at the factory about a three blocks distance from the station the party was divided into two groups, an appointed official from the factory taking charge of each section.

The Quaker Oats company covers about five or six city blocks. The two main parts of the plant consist of a new building of ten stories and an older building of eight stories. Connected with the factory are several one story annexes, a building and a sheet of cement and hollow tile.

During winter the company employs 1,000 men, the number varying somewhat during summer, which is a busy season for the plant.

The excursionists were taken to the various interesting points of interest where different processes were explained by the officials. The first group was led through the department of grading, after which the next division was the department of production, the third the department of bakery and the fourth the department of steam which in turn are placed over the kernels. The excursionists were impressed by the absence of dust in this division, a fact which is practicably completed, and said would not occur in the plant.

After lunch the more enthusiastic section of the excursionists took a tour of the Douglas Ranch works, which is practically completed, he said would not occur in the plant.

During winter the company employs the lack of dust as a result of ventilation. The party was also taken through the kitchen and the nursery dining room. From the children's hospital, the group was led to the psychopathic hospital, and then to the new cornery. Mr. Mahan said that the psychopathic hospital, which is in the process of remodelling, would meet the requirements of the Hospital, which is in the process of completion. The Cornery, the armory of the various machine and of the laboratories attracted the most interest. No one was allowed in the baby ward except attending physicians and nurses on duty in this ward, due to the strong susceptibility of babies to disease, according to a statement made by one of the nurses. The party was also taken through the gymnasium, the store and the laboratory.

FORTY STUDENTS TAKE TRIP TO QUAKER OATS FACTORY

Barley, corn, sugar, and stock foods. The most interesting process of those were in the making of puffing rice and puffed wheat. The grain is first graded to secure kernels of uniform large size and then placed in cans of about a foot in diameter and five feet in length which in turn are placed over gas burners. The heat in the cans causes the moisture in the grain to expand and swell the kernels. After a scheduled time of thirty-five minutes, the cans are conveyed to a hopper where the steam has removed each slice in the can to break the ends and forms out the kernels. The kernels, when coming in contact with the cool air open, melting in what is known commercially as a puff rice or puffed wheat or puffed rice.

In going through the plant many of the excursionists were impressed by the absence of dust as common in a factory of this nature and of such size. The official explained the lack of dust, as a result of the use of the dust removing machines. The dust removing machines are in form of huge vacuums about nine or ten feet long and eight feet is diameter and up and remove all dust and floating particles in the air and thus assure much comfort to the employees as well as sanitation in the factory.

A few excursionists impressed more by the aesthetic side of the trip rather than its commercial educational bearing were inspired to climbing to the observation tower and to the top of the water tower to secure a bird's eye view of Cedar Rapids and Iowa's rolling plains and fields of waving grain. At 11:00 o'clock the two parties met, having completed the tour through the Quaker Oats factory and proceeded in a group, to lunch at the Killian Tea Room.

After lunch the more enthusiastic of the excursionists took a tour of the Douglas Ranch works, which is located about a mile outside of Cedar Rapids. The interest in the starch works lay in the fact that in the latter part of May of 1919 the entire building was blown up by an explosion. From what was thought to be dust combustible the factory is now in the process of rebuilding and remodeling, employing some 500 men in the construction.
