HOLMES PLEADS FOR TOLERANCE

Vesper Speaker Points Out the Necessity of Open Doors to Real Living

Rev. John Haynes Holmes of the Community church, New York City, told a vesper audience that almost filled the natural science auditorium Sunday afternoon that open-mindedness and tolerance were essential to real living. The topic of his lecture was, "Open the Doors; A Plea for Freedom."

He said that nine persons out of every ten in the world were not living because the avenues of communication with the rest of the world were cut off, and approached the plea for open doors by enumerating three possibilities for communication which were normally closed: the physical sensibilities, the mind, and the heart.

Ignorance and unwillingness were blamed for the failure of most persons to see: ignorance of the natural world, and unwillingness to look at the evil and the disagreeable as well as the good and the pleasant. "Only one man in a million," he said, "will look at the whole truth of this world."

Beginning with the open-mindedness of a little child he pointed out the narrowness that accompanies maturity in the refusal of men to listen to new ideas. He mentioned anarchism, communism, and new theories of matrimony, and, while disclaiming any favor for any of them, said that it was his business as their opponent to listen openly to all that could be said in their favor, and indicated that a great truth might be hidden under some of their unpleasant exteriors.

In the same manner he approached a plea for an open heart. "The white child does not think that it should not play with the negro, nor the child of wealth with the waif of the slums, but as it grows up its parents crowd into its mind as they crowd rags into old trunks in their attics, these notions of narrowness and intolerance."

He scored the South for its antipathy to the negro, the west for its attempt to abolish the Japanese, and attacked the current anti-Semitic campaign with the remark, "We who call ourselves Christians would drive from existence the race which gave to the world Christ and his twelve disciples."

Rev. Mr. Holmes concluded his address by pointing out that it is only as these doors are opened that approach is made to the gateway of the soul.

The musical program for vesper services included a vocal duet—"The Lord is My Shepherd," by Mrs. Mildred B. Paddock and Prof. William F. Hayes of the school of music, and an anthem—"Sing to the Lord," by the vesper choir. Invocation and Scripture reading were by Rev. Walter C. Shafer, assistant pastor of the Congregational church.

VISITORS SHOW BETTER BASKET SHOOTING FORM

Close Competition for Shots Characterized Game From Start

IOWA'S DEFENSE SUPERIOR

Oss, Arnston and Kearney Forced to Dribble in Their Own Territory Time and Again — Shimek High Scorer — Lohman Gets Two Field Shots — Break Came in Last Ten Minutes

A stiffening of Minnesota's defense in the last ten minutes of the basketball game at the men's gymnasium last night and Iowa's inability to find the basket accounts for the 17 to 14 victory of the Gophers over the Hawkeyes.

The game started with stiff competition for shots and this characteristic held out all through the game. Minnesota scored first after Iowa had missed their first opportunity, when Oss followed one of Arnston's long shots in. Minnesota gained a two point lead here when Arnston scored and then Iowa gained a two point lead with Shimek's field basket and the two freethrows he made, following a flagrant foul on the Iowa forward when shooting for the basket.

Minnesota then tied and finally forged ahead to a 12 to 8 score in their favor at the end of the half.

In the second half Iowa staged a short comeback and carried the score to a 14-14 tie. This was the most sensational point in the game and both teams fought at their hardest at this point. A freethrow by Arnston gave Minnesota a one point lead and the field basket by Enke in the last five minutes of play gave them their final score. Iowa scored 6 points to Minnesota's five in the second period.

The game was one of close defense on the part of both teams all the way. Up to the last ten minutes Iowa was breaking through for shots quite consecutively while Minnesota only in- was frequently able to pierce the Iowa defense.

Iowa's defense acted as a clamp which caused the Minnesota players to angle for breaks. Oss, Arnston, and Kearney, who are masters at dribbling, frequently dribbled about in their own territory for a full minute trying to get a break. The speedy Arnston managed to get through for most of the breaks although he was able to score but two baskets in the first period and none in the second period. Oss tried hard for breaks by dribbling, depending on his weight to carry him through a great deal, but was unable to score in the second period. He also scored two baskets in the first period.

Iowa's defensive game was the outstanding feature of the Hawkeye's team and their weakness was inability to find the basket. Iowa probably had twice the good chances to shoot that Minnesota had, while many of Minnesota's successful shots were long "hope" shots.

Oss and Arnston were the outstanding stars of the game, both being unusually clever at dribbling and playing the floor in remarkable fashion. It was Oss' last game on an Iowa floor or field as he will be graduated

THE GOOD OLD DAYS

Sanity enters as a leading attribute of education. In an article published in the Harvard Magazine, Prof. T. N. Carver, of that University, expresses the opinion that Fair Harvard's position in the educational world is no longer due to the size or age of the University, but to the reputation it has for sanity and clearness of thought.

At a time when writers and speakers are using a rubber stamp prelude about the perilous times through which we are now passing, this note of sanity is highly promising. In the memory of most of us, university life was regarded as a romantic castle in Spain affair, colored with ribbons, pennants, peculiar hats, hazings, odd trousers, weird shoes, loud sweaters, innumerable mandolins, megaphones, and poodle dogs.

Here and there an adherent of the mandolin-poodle-dog type of university society is harping on the "good old days." But he sings a lonely swan song. We don't want the good old days. We want these new days when college and university undergraduates are marked by their sanity and clear-thinking, when they wear the conventional garb of the street and drawing room, and we want even newer days when the subject of campus conversations will be regulated by the questions that are germane to the moment in politics, markets, books, music, and painting, and will have as much to do with business or letters as with college sports and parties.

It seems a fair assumption that the average community will get more benefit from the sanity of which Professor Carver speaks than from the ex-insanity of the "good old days".
