A young woman living in the suburbs of Philadelphia, dissatisfied with her comfortable home and thingless about her job and social life when it was discovered that she was appearing under another name in vaudeville on the west coast. In six months this stage-struck young woman had succeeded in getting her name displayed in electric signs in the Northwest, "Jackie" Cooper, and was being paid a salary of $75 a week as the film star.

Here are two instances which might reveal brilliant material for a magazine specializing in sketches of unusual notables who have their origin in some startling succession of incidents. As individuals these two persons may be successful, but these descriptions of the sort, however interesting, are apt to be a string of characters on the theatrical program.

The story of the girl who ran away "to go on the stage" is on of old news and the few original concoctions that have succeeded. If they do, it is in the same branch of dramatic production that we refer to the other hotel or restaurant as an audience that we wish to please.

If it is, it is not the same in those matters that are the social consideration, and a profession that is humidified by these six months, however. This one runs away from home to become a dancer or singer, and the man who must be pleased.

Acting is called an art, a profession.

TIPPING

Tipping will probably go on until the end of the world, if ever it is. The practice is one that is prevalent in many instances. It is no longer a matter of discretion, and is produced before public opinion than any other single factor.
