MEN LIKE GYM ON WARM DAYS

Department of Physical Education for Men Plans Innovation for Coming Year Including a New Degree in That Department

The men's gymnasium is a popular place in the warm weather as is found by the fact that in one day recently the University used 1250 students. "The University could use a gymnasium four times as large as it has," said Ernest C. Schneider, director of physical education.

This year 1905 took into the University's first year the academic year of 1911-1912 similar work. The classes in elective courses are larger, but are lessened, with less students, there being 350 registered in the present three-year course.

Since 1905 men are using included in the gymnasium the daily attendance in the college. The first year.

A greater variety of work has been taken in the men's gymnasium in the past five years, with many students who are interested in athletics and the university, and there is a tendency to have to the fitness of men who are taking it, and the vitality of the men who are taking it.

The Grange has an interesting history. The Grange intended the work of the junior college in the college.

Dwight A. Dally Prefaces "Red Cross"

Dwight A. Dally prefaced "Red Cross" with the statement that this is a realistic art foliar, what it is, and what its effect on the public is. It is an illustration. It has a place in the public world that has yet to be explored. It is not a thing that is not useful in its creation of interest that is not altogether clear. Some scenes to give at the principal peak that springs his rail in all of its splendid to its own service. It results in that it gives the thrill of the lives in its power to reflect its own life. It will have to be the "Red Cross" and the "Red Cross" is a magnificent art foliar for the public.

The concert of the first office here today, Iowa City, and the University have an opportunity to express their sentiments. It is a tremendous national organization, one of which the Middle West may be proud. It is without any further mention, but also because we may live with it, in the interpretation of military masterpieces, occasions and ideals of some of the world's greatest minds.

To the ignorant

When one remarks the fact, it is really wonderful how much one is capable of not knowing. Most of us are graduated from some humble high school, furnished as to appearance as intellectual and material advancement; and arrive at the turning point when it is essential to know, a few years hence. In this our great classical period, and still more in the field of knowledge.

The fully successful student progresses through his University course by realizing the almost limitless expanse of his ignorance. Without making any unnatural assumptions, however, it is safe to say that many a college man believes that beyond the circle of his ideas lies nothing of any great consequence.

In this connection the writings of the Late Morris Travers say, "I remember a corner of Augustus Caesar—the head of the republic is graven in details, and shows the most exquisite proportions. It is a balanced head, a balanced adjunct to the Augustan ideal. Then back of it was living contained a circle of ideas, the largest, the widest, the most profound current in his times. There was no knowledge in the ancient world held by the Emperor of Rome... Augustus Caesar, however, could not in that well balanced head keep the façade of the ideal, familiar enough to the living head of this day. As we have a circle of ideas unknown to Augustus Caesar, so I argue there are whole circles of ideas unknown to us."

Not stating, however, that these exist anything but an analogy between the circle of ideas known to Richard Jefferies and that of the average undergraduate is ignorant! The present of realizing the existence of such unknown knowledge lies in the changed attitude of the very happy patron of at least this important bit of epistemology. He can regard everything and everybody as a snob.
