CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS

One of the things absent during the summer, the loss of which does not seem to be felt seriously by the summer sessionist, is the campus organization—the fraternity, the sorority, the club, the society and the hundred and one other groups which abound during the regular term. Still there seems to be as much University spirit considering the circumstances as there is during any other time of the year and certainly it is a more democratic spirit.

Probably organizations are not so essential as some would have us believe, nor such powers for good. If nothing else the childish rivalry of these groups which leads them to squander large sums of money, become self-centered, and resolve themselves into an "exclusive caste", is absent during the summer months.

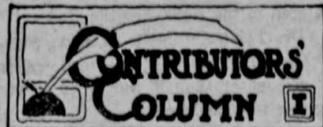

Every academic year a host of new organizations find their way to Iowa's campus. The student who is a member of the greatest number of such groups is supposed to be the most popular student. It can be said with some degree of accuracy that there are students who join societies without knowing their purpose, certainly without taking an active part in them. They pay their initiation fee, get the societies emblem—pin, key, ring or what ever it may be, and depart with their jewelry, satisfied that they have another decoration for their vest, and a chance for another picture in the Hawkeye.

STALKING THE TURF

However bizarre and attractive the boards and footlights may be to the amateur or semi-professional actor, the spark of histrionic enthusiasm is likely to dwindle to a very feeble sputter when boards and foots are replaced by turf and flashlights. Out-of-door acting is exposed to grief in a variety of forms. It is hard work for the voice of an actor not experienced in producing adequate volume with entire ease; the ground is uneven, the setting rudimentary, the audience restless and distracted, and the small dogs of the community infested with a native disregard for the proprieties of the occasion.

In the face of all of these discomforts The Out-of-Door Players of the University have given five evening performances, cheerfully and gratuitously, for the pleasure of studying and presenting the drama, and of doing a public service. Besides that they have brought to the city three plays of the Devereux company, at a time when professional theatricals of that quality are usually out of season.

Dramatic production entails a vast amount of hard work and trouble of which the casual observer is not aware. The season has been rigorous and most commendably carried off. The Players deserve the thanks of the entire community.

MUST THE WOMEN DO AS THE PUBLIC BIDS?

There has been a great deal of discussion lately in regard to the newly established and most sensible custom of bobbing women's hair. A few favor it but these few consist of the more progressive women and a very few young men who are always ready for the latest fad. The majority of the people, the conservative, and supposedly rational minded ones, are strongly against it. They protest that it is only a passing fad and whether sensible or not it will not last. It lessens the dignity of woman in any sphere she may enter, and detracts from her personal charm. It is alright in its place but its place extends no farther than girls of fifteen or sixteen years. Some of the most prominent business men refuse to hire bobbed haired women and many progressive school boards will not consider applicants of this type, regardless of their mental or educational qualifications. And if the young woman is independent enough, progressive enough, to bob her hair regardless of prejudices she may find herself without a job.

This narrow mindedness is certainly unfair to the young woman of today. It is supposed to be one of her privileges by nature to make herself as healthful, as attractive as possible. If bobbing her hair is a means to this end, why deny her this privilege. And yet, knowing this to be the case, there is no wonder why teachers and working girls are queer. No man was ever denied a job simply because of the manner of wearing his hair. If employees should get together and agree not to hire any man unless he wore his hair long there would probably be a revolution. But the woman must calmly do as the public bids. If a woman is experienced and has ordinary common sense and ability, it is unreasonable to suppose that cutting her hair or leaving it long will make any material difference in her teaching ability. Considering that her community is modern and normally progressive it is conceivable that it will have all the more respect for her.

A Woman.

INJUSTICE TO WOMEN OF EARLY HOURS

There is no valid reason why University women should not be allowed all the privileges of University men, but this is not true. Among other limitations placed upon them is the restriction of late hours. Men have always been allowed this privilege and no noticeable infamy has resulted. Women have never been tried out, but there is every reason to suppose that their judgment, their common sense, and brain power, is on a par with men.

The supposed purpose of these limitations is for the protection of the girls themselves and the promotion of moral standards. The idea is right of course (provided the girls need this protection), but the method of carrying it out is not only unfair but inconsistent. With a gentleman escort a girl is privileged to sign out for two nights a week. Otherwise, regardless of intentions or plans, she must be in by the decreed time, or be reported. It is absolutely absurd to suppose that a bunch of girls together have any wrong ideas in view. Nevertheless, under no conditions are they permitted late entrance. And they live under the continual fear of having their "privileges" taken from them.

Some of the authorities offer as a possible explanation the name of the school in living up to its previous code of strictness. If this were the strongest reason, and it undoubtedly is, it would be barbaric indeed. If civilization has followed this plan we would still be permitting crucifixion and encouraging the slave trade.

It is not only unfair but it is dangerous in itself. Undue strictness is often the cause of the most radical results. It is the forbidden deed that one wishes to do; and the independent girl, though otherwise willingly obedient, may be tempted to rebel.

This is merely a remnant of an old custom. Women used to be unable to take care of themselves. Now this is all changed. Democracy in the fullest sense is making rapid growth throughout the world. Uniform suffrage has been established, and women recognized as the intellectual equal of men. Coeducation is emphasized but not practiced. Why not dispense with the remaining injustices, and give women equal privileges with men including late hours?

EFFECTS OF WOULD-BE PHILIPPINE STATES OF THE UNION

Here in the United States, as in the Philippines, there are some people who are strongly advocating the retention of islands, for they frankly ignore the promises made by the congress of the United States. Most prominent of these advocates is Ambassador George Harvey of New York who wrote in his weekly magazine recently:

OUR WEDNESDAY MORNING

HARVAT & STACH

"If we grant that the future disposition of the Philippines is an open question to be determined at the will of the United States, the incontrovertible fact of history remains that the islands were acquired with the frankly acknowledged purpose and expectation of permanent retention, and that no pledge or intimation was made to the contrary, anymore than in the case of Florida, or California, or Alaska, or any other territory acquired by the United States."

The Bacon resolution, which brought a tie vote in the United States Senate, declared it to be America's purpose to set the islands up in independence and the McEnery resolution, which was finally adopted, differed from the Bacon resolution chiefly in the fact that it did not contain so specific a pledge. Anybody in the Senate at that time did not declare it to be America's purpose to permanently hold those islands, nor did the administration so interpret the McEnery resolution. In fact the United States from the start declared, in extending over those islands her sovereignty, that the people of the United States were not actuated by any other desire than that of bettering the conditions of the natives, proclaiming to the world the doctrine, "the Philippines are for the Filipinos." In the words of President McKinley: "The Philippines are ours, not to exploit, but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of government."

But let us assume, for the sake of argument, that the Philippines people would accept the proposal of making them full fledged American citizens and that the Philippines would become an integral part of the United States. The population of those islands is as large as that of the state of New York and the area covered by them is almost that of Iowa, Illinois, and Indiana combined. Geographically, and for effective control in local state administration, the archipelago would conveniently be divided into three states—Luzon, Visayan and Mindanao, so that, with this arrangement, the United States Senate would have to add at least six senators to its present size and some forty-five new members to the House of Representatives.

What effect would this arrangement have upon the United States when these senators and representatives are seated at Washington? During the past New York has held the honor as the umpire in almost all the presidential elections, but if the Philippine Islands were to become an integral part of the United States and actively participate in American politics, that honor would be transferred immediately away from it in favor of the new Philippine states. The vote of the Filipinos would become the deciding factor, not only in the election of the president of the United States, but also in the moulding of national legislation and policies. Whichever party sided with them or gave the most good to them, the Philippine congressmen would undoubtedly vote "en bloc" with in whatever proposition it might pursue.

Consequently, the election of the president of the United States would be tied up in the hands of the Filipinos, and national legislation and policy would be moulded and determined largely under their influence—a decidedly disastrous element in American politics. Not only would these be the effects, but, as the years rolls on, more unforeseen obstacles would be encountered. Log-rolling, special legislation and corruption would feature American-Filipino politics. P. I. A.

CASE PICTURES CRISIS IN FAITH

Professor of Sociology Says New Age Is Widening Old Religion

The present crisis in the world of religious thought is no less significant than those which are stirring the economical, political and educational life of the world, said Dr. Clarence Marsh Case, associate professor of sociology, at the union service for all churches of the city Sunday evening in the Baptist church. The changes in the world of religion, he declared, are especially noticeable in our modern social idealism and in the evolutionary conception of the development of the universe.

Dr. Case offered the following definition of religion: "Religion is the individual's completest reaction to the largest conceived world of individual." This, he said, includes all religion from the most primitive to the highest conception of God. Every individual lives in a world of his own. Ignorance itself is a universe. Religion is a universe. The biggest world is revealed to those who are wholeheartedly religious. It is the task of each individual to work from his small and narrow world into a larger and better one. Faith is not an inheritance or a gift, but an achievement of each individual for himself.

The modern conception of God, Dr. Case continued, is not new. It is as old as the history of the thinking world, but it has come to more prominence in our more advanced civilization, and is being interpreted through our modern and more critical light. Modern science has not destroyed religion, which lies in the world which no telescope or microscope can penetrate. The doctrine of evolution has not done away with the idea of a creator, but has made creation continuous, instead of a process long ago completed.

In completion, Dr. Case said that modern knowledge had not diminished the value of the Bible. Those who want to know about astronomy or geology can go to the modern books of science; but those who want to know about faith and God must still go to the book of books.

ULLMAN PROPHECIES
CHANGES IN LATIN
IN HIGH SCHOOLS

"The fundamental principle of Latin teaching as recognized today is that the aim, method, and content must go together," asserted Prof. Berthold L. Ullman, head of the Latin department, in his lecture in the liberal arts assembly hall, yesterday afternoon.

"Important as the work of the committee on reorganization of Latin in high schools, it will be overshadowed in a few years by the work of the American Classical League, which is principally concerned with the teaching of Latin," stated Dr. Ullman.

Professor Ullman told that he had just returned from a meeting of the sub-committee chairmen who are working under the advisory committee of 15 for the reorganization of Latin. While there, a report was very carefully drawn up, which is to be the basis for the work of the committee, thorough investigation is to be made not only by these teachers but the assistance of educational experts will be given so that no technical educational mistake will be made.

"A very elaborate program is to be carried out," Mr. Ullman stated. "Included in this will be a series of tests for groups of pupils of equal standard, who have not studied Latin. They will try to find the spread of improved efficiency (mental discipline). Efforts will be made also to find if pupils who do improve because of the study of Latin are spending too much time to get this improvement and if it could be obtained in some other shorter way.

The main facts in the report to be issued this fall from the committee on reorganization are that Caesar will be put in the fourth half year and that many of the constructions will be put in the first half of the third year.

In conclusion, Mr. Ullman stated he was very hopeful for the work of the new committee. He feels that this will serve as a foundation for all Latin teaching and that the result will be accepted by every one because it is made by experts.

HEARERS BY READING OF PINERO'S COMEDY

Mary Agness Doyle, every inch a Celt, so her friends say, read Arthur Pinero's "Thunderbolt" to appreciative audience last evening in the natural science auditorium. Miss Doyle read with sincere feeling for her art, and with an Irish lilt to her voice which is fascinating to an audience.

Mary Agnes Doyle has had experience as a teacher, a reader and an actress. For two years she was director of expression of St. Clara college, Sinsinawa, Wis., and for three years in charge of the department of dramatic art and voice and diction of the Connuck school, Los Angeles, Cal. She is a lecturer on the better speech movement, and has been a prominent chautauqua reader for several years. She had a season with Donald Robertson Players of Chicago and two seasons with New Theatre Company of New York City under the direction of Winthrop Ames. Also she has played every professional performance in this country of the famous Stratford prize play "The Piper."

Some of the most important numbers on the program which Mary Agnes Doyle reads are: "Riders of the Sea," "The Traveling Man," "Peter Pan," "The Twelve-pound Look," and "Peg 'O My Heart."

"The Thunderbolt," which Miss Doyle read last night, centers about an unexpected bequest to a young lady, in a will which was the center of interest to a large family of prospective heirs. Their reception of the news and of the young lady herself forms a story rich in tense situations and revelations of character.
