Through the play of "Beyond the Horizon," this week's production of the University's dramatic society, the University will see a dramatic presentation of a problem with which the average student is faced in his college life. The play will be presented at 8:15 in the University theater Saturday night. It is under the direction of R. S. Holmberg, who is also a student of the University of Illinois. The play is the first of the annual dramatic society production and is expected to be extremely attractive to the students.

The play revolves around the lives of a group of university students who are faced with the problem of finding a way to support themselves while attending college. The play is divided into five acts, each of which deals with different aspects of this problem. The first act focuses on the financial struggles of the students, while the second act deals with the emotional impact of these struggles. The third act explores the social implications of the students' financial situation, while the fourth act examines the psychological effects. The fifth and final act brings together all of these elements in a satisfying conclusion.

The cast of the play includes several well-known actors from the University's drama department. Among them are John Smith, who plays the role of the struggling student, and Sarah Johnson, who portrays the character of the loving but frustrated mother. The play is directed by Frederick Brown, who has a long history of success in directing dramatic productions.

The play is expected to be a box office success, and the play's director, R. S. Holmberg, is confident that the audience will be touched by the universal themes and the compelling performances of the cast. The play is a must-see for anyone interested in dramatic productions, and it is sure to be a highlight of the University's arts season.
The central division of the Modern Language Association of America will hold its annual meeting here in the New York Sheraton Hotel on March 1 and 2. The program, entitled "The Importance and Value of World Languages," will bring together educators, researchers, and policymakers from around the world to discuss the role of languages in global education and diplomacy.
