In a second of the University social secretaries this Monday, the Telephone Society committee met, the national chaplain of Alpha Phi Alpha was granted the men's colored fraternity and the local chapter has not been established for less than a year. Because of the social motility and necessary living conditions which apply to the local chapters, the fraternity has been unable to waive this rule and grant the charter. Alpha Phi Alpha has chapters in Kekima, Kekima, University of Washington, and Northwestern, Pa. The chapter is to be active and in the establishment of the chapter. It is expected that the chapter will be in full swing this year and that it will have an active and strong membership.

It is often urged that we should occasionally renew our acquaintances with Plato’s dialogues; we are often advised to gain a knowledge of the philosophy of Plato and Socrates, so that we may drive ourselves into contemplation of Education and his theory. In the case of George Washington, it is different. His philosophy is the idea of a nation; his great traitors and his enemies taught him a state of children; and his achievement is a constant urge to greater effort.

Perhaps his greatest contribution to us was the fine leadership which he exemplified. Since the Christ assumed the leadership of his people and Caesar and Napoleon of their nations, every nation and every race of the earth has known the inspiration of a great leader. To many, when we call the Father of Our Country, we take his place among the great leaders of the world. This, leadership is one of the greatest world assets. The leader that makes a move, urges to greater accomplishment, shows the way to his followers, earns their love,—he be the world here.

Discovery that is degraded and poor and suffering; give it a good leader and it will emerge into a prosperous state. Find a country that is rich and prosperous and happy; take away its leaders and watch at its downfall. The element that moves nations is just as great a force as one that we think of Washington today.

PARAVERS

The definition of a parasite is an "animal living on, in, or with another that it cannot do without, the other being the host," an idea that is generalized in a similar sense, a "leader," and a "frightened," the same sense. What is the definition of a parasite as we now know it? A parasite is not just an animal that lives on or with another; it is a leader that is afraid of change and education. A leader that is afraid of change and education is a parasite.

WE COULD DO NOTHING WITHOUT PAINTING
ARCHITECTURE OR SCULPTURE! — RUTH ST. DENIS

It was at one of Ruth St. Denis' rehearsals that I noticed something. Yes, of course, she would speak to the young men from the newspaper. We stood by the great plate while the small group had been watching. She then paused, and showed us her hand.

First she spoke of art, mentioning the relation of all arts, and impressing an opinion that there is a decided interdependence. "You could do nothing without architecture, painting, sculpture, etc.," she went on, "and when I see some attempt at these, I feel that we would be better off if their components were all there.

Our dress is Hellenic. J'c's favorite with her. "I mean that the period of the dress is really to stimulate all art production. Oh, but for fifty years or so, perhaps, but it will be the best."

In a moment the subject shifted. "You know that the way we Americans dress is as such a form that it is practically a 'ready-to-wear' thing."

"Yes ma'am."

"That's right. One of her leading, competent hands effortlessly smoothed her suit and her own gowns. "Absolutely hideous. We all try to be finer."

SLIVOS SHOPS CLASS TO SING AT JUBILEE SATURDAY
The Silver Shop class of the Rock Island organization in Chicago will sing at the Jubilee Assembly on Saturday evening, February 22. Under the leadership of the best choirs chosen from among the thousand men who are employed in the Rock Island shops, there are many fine voices among the men. It is in this respect able to a club.

Prof. Philip C. Opperheim expressed his pleasure over the arrangement, saying that since the University of Illinois it may cause some confusion, among the men, there will be the front kind of a event.

For years the Rock Island system has sought to encourage a spirit of some among the men, by fostering community associations, publications, and other enterprises.
