Several years ago a couple of my friends started a small business. They opened a shop in the downtown area of our city. It was a small store, but they were passionate about what they were selling.

They sold handmade candles, and they believed in the power of their product to bring joy and relaxation to their customers. They worked tirelessly to create unique scents and beautiful designs.

Their dedication paid off, and their business grew. They expanded their store, added more products, and even opened a new location in a nearby town. Their success encouraged others in our community to start their own businesses.

But they didn't stop there. They started a non-profit organization to help local artists and crafters start their own businesses. They offered workshops, mentorship, and resources to anyone who was interested in starting their own venture.

Through their efforts, our community has become a hub for small business owners. The entrepreneurs who started with just a dream have gone on to create jobs, support their families, and make our city a better place to live.

So when you see someone starting a new business, take a moment to support them. Their journey is not easy, but with our help, they can achieve their dreams. Together, we can make a difference in our community.

"An Idle Roomer"

To My Patrons:

Today I make one of the most important announcements I have ever made during my career in Iowa City.

I am proud and happy to announce that I will have the pleasure of being one of the first managers of the new theatre. I will be in charge of the annual trip of the juniors.

I have just concluded negotiations by telephone with Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who has agreed to come and see the new theatre. The first saw beauty in costly splendor; the second responded to unobtrusive simplicity.
