The Merchant of Venice

The Merchant of Venice as performed by the players of the University Theatre last week was the most amateur play produced at the University in the seven years that have been associated with the institution. It will be repeated on Saturday night at 8:30.

Miss John Gotley as Portia was remarkable. Miss Lew Low as Iago was as good as any of the others, but the leading role was that of Portia. Miss Gotley was as natural and as convincing in the role as any player I have seen in it, and her portrayal of the character was so successful that I found her performance the most convincing of the entire production.

The script was written by William Shakespeare, and the direction was by Mr. E. H. Hurley, the head of the University Theatre. The actors were all University students, and the production was carried out with great care and attention to detail.

The Merchant of Venice is a tragedy by William Shakespeare, and it is known for its complex characters and themes. The play was first performed in 1600, and it has been performed countless times since then. It is considered one of Shakespeare's greatest plays, and it continues to be performed today.

The Merchant of Venice is a story about a merchant named Shylock, who is forced to lend money to Antonio, a friend of his daughter Portia. Shylock demands a very high interest rate, and when Antonio cannot pay it, Shylock wants to take his own flesh as payment.

The play explores themes of justice, mercy, and revenge, and it is known for its vivid characters and dramatic plot. It is a timeless classic that continues to be performed and enjoyed by audiences around the world.

Miss Gotley's performance as Portia was exceptional, and it is a testament to the talent and skill of the University Theatre. The play was well-received by the audience, and it is sure to be a highlight of the University Theatre's season.

Monopoly Charged in Radio Industry

Monopoly, a term often used in the context of the American radio industry, refers to a situation where a few companies control a significant portion of the market, restricting competition and driving up prices. In the early 20th century, the radio industry experienced a period of rapid growth, with many new companies entering the market. As a result, some argue, the industry became more concentrated, leading to what is often referred to as a "radio trust," which would later be characterized as a monopsony in the market for radio programming.

The article mentions that, according to the radio industry, the term "radio trust" was used because there were so many new companies entering the market, leading to a situation where a few companies could control the market for radio programming.

Example Text:

"The radio industry, as it was known in the early 20th century, was characterized by rapid growth and many new companies entering the market. Hart Lectures On Treatment Of Our Great Grandfathers

Prof. Albert Rushball Hart gave one of the most interesting and keenly listened to of the faculty conferences on the subject of the treatment of our great-grandfathers at the meeting yesterday. The subject was "Treat Great Grandfathers." He in- terested that we should understand the coming of our great-grandfathers and the effect we are having on them. It is necessary for us to understand that they are our parents and that we are responsible for their well-being.
