THE PROBLEM OF STATE UNIVERSITIES
State tax supported educational institutions have reached a stage in their development where a steady increase in the number of students is no longer a debatable issue. In most cases the only arguments against further increase are the financial cost to the public and the possible decrease in the quality of instruction. The general trend of the last five years and in all probability will increase in the program of the next five years. A university should be a public service and should be made available to the public at a cost which it can afford. The cost of a university education should not be determined by the ability of one family to pay.

There are two solutions to the problem. Either legislature must increase appropriations to educational institutions or the latter must adopt measures to control the number of students who wish to receive their education. The first solution is not feasible. There are only two resources available to the states, the taxpaying public, and the state legislature, and it is impossible for the states to raise the number of students to the point where they will be able to afford it.

The problem of state universities is a problem of which every student is aware. The advantages of a university education are so obvious that it is impossible for the legislature to make the necessary increase in the budget of the university. The only solution is the appointment of a state university system to control the number of students who wish to receive their education. The solution of the problem is a difficult one, but it is necessary for the state to control the number of students who wish to receive their education.

BULLETIN

City Hall, Mar. 30.—Special to the Daily Iowa.

The favorite song of the morning travelers is interpolated for two or three minutes of this afternoon's edition of the Iowa City Free Press. Iowa City's fighting chief of police, retired with only a little of his keen edge, has begun to rap, a turn of the music was rapped on the street car track. The musicians at the physics building recorded an earthquake.
