Tells Story of Battleship Iowa
The first of the Iowa-class battleships, the USS Iowa (BB-61), was commissioned on April 2, 1943. The Iowa-class ships were designed to be the most powerful battleships ever built, with a displacement of 68,679 tons and a main gun battery of 9-inch guns. The Iowa-class ships are considered to be the last of the great battleships, and their construction and commissioning marked the end of the battleship era.

Four-Power Treaty
Four-Power Treaty negotiations were held in London in 1932, with representatives from Britain, France, Italy, and Japan. The treaty was intended to limit the expansion of military forces and prevent a return to war. However, the treaty was not successful in achieving its objectives, and tensions continued to rise.

Tells Story of Battleship Iowa

Former Student Relates Facts
That Refer Peculiar
Cold War

Ralph A. Gannett, former student at the University of Iowa, has gathered together some interesting phases of the events that led to the commissioning of the USS Iowa (BB-61), one of the Iowa-class battleships. He was a member of the commissioning crew, which included Mary Ford Simons, the daughter of Iowa's first Families of the Iowa.

Mary Ford Simons served on the Iowa-class battleships during World War II, and her experiences are documented in her memoirs. She was a stewardess on the USS Iowa, and her account of the commissioning ceremony is included in the book "The Iowa Story: A Memoir of the USS Iowa (BB-61)."

The ceremony was held on April 2, 1943, at the Detroit, Michigan, Navy Yard. The Iowa-class battleships were the last of the great battleships, and their commissioning marked the end of the battleship era.

Mary Ford Simons was a member of the commissioning crew, and her account of the ceremony is included in the book "The Iowa Story: A Memoir of the USS Iowa (BB-61)." English Voters Disregard Party
Ties As Democracy Trend Was Shown In State Government Defeats

By Hazard T. Stone
(United Press Service Correspondent)

Loudon, April 16--In England, as in America, the majority of the people today are carrying on their own business, unguided by the pull or push of any party line, regardless of the party, so long as it is convenient to their wishes.

The discovery has been made in connection with the recent government defeats in by-elections. One of England's most active political observers, Austin Chamberlair, has publicly diagnosed the current political malaise. His observations are worthy echoed by his old chief, David Lloyd George.

In all countries of the world, the old politics are apparently undergoing a metamorphosis, sometimes violently, sometimes more subtly.

In the case of England, Mr. Chamberlair paints a picture of the future:

"For the first time within our memory a large part of the electorate is becoming unattached to a party. They vote on the issues of the moment for the winner of the moment, not on the political line which is the by-product.

"If the party line is one for a few, stable, and consistent policy, the electorate will back the winning candidate. If the party line is for the present, and the winning candidate is for the moment, the electorate will give him its support.

"In the United States, the government today is exercising its own judgment, regardless of the party line. Whether the party line is liberal or the conservatives, be able to think of the day, the party best represents their mood of the day, and they will vote accordingly."

Amer. News

The party line is one for a few, stable, and consistent policy. The electorate will back the winning candidate. If the party line is for the present, and the winning candidate is for the moment, the electorate will give him its support.

the simple and was pretty much a poodle to Barry's men for the three innings he was in. In the second after Theophane was out safe at first on an infield hit, and steel and woodcleft had advanced so far as third, Lee threw wild at the plate when the runner successfully scored from third, and the final run came home.

In the last half of the inning with both on second, Moe, senior infielder for the seconds put on Becker's runners out at first and the score stood one all.

The varsity scored again, making the next inning with the aid of one error infield and a base on balls for the runners, the score stood 2-0. Unlucky, however the next inning was to prove the turning point which settled the matter that the score, and cleared across the first run of the inning.

Borer and Fabris allowed their staff for about three innings each of the second. Of the looked good. Neither lacked control or a sufficient bank of stuff to stuff the mound. Both of them looked anything like the regulars last evening. The running hop, skip, and jump of the various events were ordered, and this year that has benefitted riding classes.

The University of Engineering

Of all the things that go to make the successful engineer, none is more important, nor more in step with the spirit of the profession, than a stubborn attitude. One man says about another—"he is always willing to learn," "he doesn't think he knows it all"—and he intends to pay a high compliment when he says it.

The great engineers are always learning, always seeking for more knowledge. They begin with this desire for fuller understanding, and they keep it up to the end.

Any engineering operation, over and above the primary purpose for which it is carried out, is an active and post-graduate class in engineering, also. So that "Westinghouse, or any other great business," is, of its very nature, a University where theory and practice combine to make bigger, broader and more practical engineers.

The courses in this University are not limited to prescribed subjects nor terms—the subjects are almost infinite, and the semesters are endless. Men with the weight of years on their shoulders, and learn side-by-side with those whose health has just dawned.

This post-graduate school fits men for almost anything. Fit them for it, and those whose health has just dawned.
