Charge Operator With Visiting Mrs. McPherson

Evangelist Perturbed During Reading Of Testimony

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 1.—Almea Temple McPherson, evangelist, was visited at a room in the Ambassador hotel by Kenneth G. Ormiston, her former radio operator on two occasions last year, it was testified today at her preliminary hearing on charges of conspiracy.

Miss Agnes Callahan, chamber maid at the hotel, placed on the stand by the state, declared she saw a man, whom she positively identified as Ormiston, enter the evangelist's room. The identification was made when the witness was shown a photograph of Ormiston.

Mrs. McPherson occupied room 230 at the hotel at least six times during the last summer and fall and Ormiston was seen on the same floor of the hotel at least six times, Miss Callahan testified.

Ormiston limps On two of the visits, the maid said she saw Ormiston go into the evangelist's room. The man had a decided limp, the witness testified. Ormiston limps, it was brought out at the hearing.

A glow of color mounted to Mrs. McPherson's cheeks as Miss Callahan gave her testimony. The evangelist seemed scarcely breathing as she sat looking straight at the witness.

M. I. Gilbert, defense counsel took each of Ormiston's six visits separately and asked Miss Callahan if she recalled any other person or that floor of the hotel on each particular day. She said she did not.

Albert L. Denman, assistant manager of the Ambassador hotel testified he had seen Mrs. McPherson at the hotel many times and that she had preference for room 230. Shows a photograph of Ormiston he said it resembled very much a man he had seen on the third floor of the hotel during the Christmas week last year.

The man had a decided limp, Denman said. He visited Mrs. McPherson's room on one occasion during the week about 11 o'clock in the morning.

Denman injected a comment to the effect that he was not taking a stand against the evangelist and that he wanted everyone to have their just dues.

Begins Reading of Transcript Then began the reading of the transcript of the testimony of the evangelist's mother, Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, before the grand jury.

When the doorman had given the first account of seeing Mrs. McPherson at a point which contradicted a previous statement by the evangelist, a huddled conference was held at the defense and of the contable. Mrs. McPherson talked rapidly and earnestly in low tones while her attorneys listened, occasionally asking questions. The evangelist was perturbed and made little pretense of concealing it.

Charles Sheakley Dies Following Short Sickness

Prominent Commerce Student Succumbs After Severe Case of Tonsillitis

Charles Harold Sheakley, Cm., of New Hampton, aged 20, died at a local hospital here at 8 a. m., yesterday.

The death was due to infection from a severe case of tonsillitis. He entered the hospital Tuesday, Sept. 21.

Starting his last year in the university, "Hod's" activities may best be measured by his popularity on the campus, and by the number of his friends. He was vice-president of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, and has been prominent in the intramural activities in which his fraternity participated.

The New Hampton boy was born Nov. 11, 1905. His father, C. C. Sheakley, has recently been made a member of the Iowa State Board of Education. Other members of the family are: Edward Sheakley, senior law student here; Richard, a senior in New Hampton high school; and Mrs. Evelyn Grave, who graduated from Iowa in 1904, and was a member of the Delta Delta Delta sorority.

Sheakley's parents and younger brother and sister have been here since last Thursday, but left Sept. 30 for New Hampton, where the funeral services will be held, Monday Oct. 4.

The flag over Old Capitol was lowered to half-staff Friday, in tribute.

Unmasked Robbers in Pay Roll Holdup

One Dead in Thrilling Baltimore Daylight Robbery

BALTIMORE, Oct. 1.—Unmasked robbers today thrust a battery of ir arms into the faces of four Henry Sonneborn and company payroll messengers and took $46,678 in cash, in Baltimore's boldest daylight holdup of recent years.

They fled with their loot, snatched from the floor of the payroll messengers taxi-cab as it drew to the curb at the company's clothing manufacturing plant, but left one of her number dead for a laundry wench manager to identify as "John W. Danko."

Further identification awaited examination by Bertillon reports.

Met With No Resistance Several shots fired by the robbers apparently to cow the messengers, truck the taxi-cab but injured no one. Walter Eggers, one of messengers, said he advised his companions not to resist because the money was insured and he was convinced they would be killed.

The robbery was over within two minutes. The few passersby who witnessed it were too astounded to sound an alarm until the bandit car, a sedan, minus a door torn off against the side of the Sonneborn taxi-cab, had plunged recklessly through traffic to disappear after dropping a bag containing $500 in silver.

Police Find Dead Bandit A few minutes later, on another street, police found the car, with Danko dead with a bullet wound in his head, crumpled over a repeating rifle, a sawed off shot gun and an automatic pistol. The floor of the car was littered with cartridges and blood spattered. Police believe Danko was the victim of his own or his companion's carelessness with firearms, or to have been slain deliberately by the other gunmen.

Realtors Charged With Delaying Red Cross Assistance

Claim That Mayor and Governor Tried to Stop Campaign

[By The Associated Press] WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—Whisperings of discord which have accompanied the effort to raise a $5,000,000 relief fund for Florida storm sufferers culminated today in a flat charge by John Barton Payne, chairman of the American Red Cross, that Florida officials and real estate men had "practically destroyed" the campaign by repeated attempts to belittle reports of damage and suffering.

Despite these efforts which were attributed to Gov. John W. Martin, Mayor E. C. Romph of Miami, and others, chairman Payne said he felt duty-bound to carry on the drive for funds and appealed to the country to continue to help. A little more than $3,000,000 has been collected.

Attempt to Minimize Loss In the face of efforts to minimize the losses, Mr. Payne asserted that Red Cross officials in Florida had reported the greatest need for relief since the San Francisco earthquake and fire, having 5,000 homes as totally destroyed and 18,000 families poverty stricken.

The Red Cross chairman's views were given in an exchange of telegrams with C. C. Pickney, chairman of the Richmond, Va., Red Cross chapter, and in telegrams and correspondence between himself and Mayor Romph. In addition, James L. Fleser, vice chairman of the Red Cross, in a report to headquarters declared that relief work had been greatly retarded by "persistent reports that the need as set forth by the Red Cross does not exist."

$10,000 Check Stopped Writing Chairman Pickney, Mr. Payne asserted that "poor people who suffered are regarded as of less consequence than the hotel and tourists business in Florida." The message was in reply to one which said that Mayor Bright of Richmond was considering the recall of a $10,000 check sent to Miami by Richmond donors on the strength of a circular letter signed by Mayor Romph saying he was convinced a "very exaggerated idea" of real conditions had been created.

Delivery of this check was held up today by Mayor Bright pending word from Red Cross officials. Mr. Bright declared in Richmond today that in view of conflicting statements as to relief needs, he felt an investigation should be made to learn "who is right, the boosters or the Red Cross."

Payne Combs Telegram Chairman Payne told Mayor Romph in another message that he had been compelled to "combat" telegrams from Gov. Martin and others in his drive for funds and asserted, "If you and your assistants have the courage to deal with the situation adequately, call in these (Miami) newspapers and give them an honest statement without trying to advertise Florida."

Statements given out in Washington by the Red Cross, the chairman added were contradicted by statements from Florida.

Indict 79 Men For Violation of Prohibition Act

Seat of Big Liquor Traffic Visited by Federal Agents Bond Set at Ten Thousand

[By The Associated Press] CHICAGO, Oct. 1.—The federal government took a hand today in the affairs of Cicero, Chicago's turbulent suburb, and indicted seventy-nine village officials, gangsters, saloon keepers and hoodlums on charges of conspiring to violate the prohibition law.

The writs returned by a federal grand jury named Joseph E. Klenka, mayor; Theodore Svoboda, chief of police, "Scar Face Al" Capone, gangster over-lord of the suburb; Miles and Klondike O'Donnell, chiefs of an opposing gang, and Harry Madigan, in front of whose saloon Assistant County Prosecutor W. H. McWiggin was shot to death by machine gun fire last spring.

Say Officials Were Bred In the community where for many months, beer runners, bootleggers and gangsters operating in Chicago have been reputed to have their base of operations, the federal government charges existence of a co-spiracy plan whereby officials obtained money for permitting broad violations of the prohibition law.

The seventy-nine defendants are charged specifically with conspiring to possess, transport, deliver and sell ten thousand gallons of uncolored spirits, fifty thousand gallons of cereal beverages and ten thousand gallons of wine.

Among sixty-three overt acts charged to the defendants, nine allege payments of $5,000 to $20,000 by gangsters to city officials of Cicero, aggregating more than $100,000.

Operating Since 1922 Pat Roche, federal agent, said the syndicate had been operating since 1922 and had done a weekly business of $100,000. Among the almost three score men indicted, was a committee man of the Crowe-Barrett republican faction of Cook county, of which Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney, is a leader.

Federal warrants were issued for all the men wanted, and deputy United States marshals set out to arrest them. Bond for the principal defendants was set at $10,000 each.

Cicero has been the seat of gang warfare and the scene of many murders in recent years, and Chicago police have noted it repeatedly as the seat of the biggest traffic in liquor in Cook county.

Cowbells Jangle As Freshmen Give Evidence of Pep

Schaape and Frosh Assistants Lead in Yells and Songs; Give Away Cowbells

A yelling, screaming, howling mass of 500 green capped freshmen scrambling for cowbells featured at the freshmen meeting last night at the Memorial Union. Led by head cheer leader Clair Schaape and his freshmen assistants the first year men yelled themselves hoarse in one of the peepiest mass meetings that has been held in years.

The meeting started at 7:15 and soon the roof garden was crowded with the noisy yearlings. The program began with the singing of the Iowa Corn Song and "Iowa Fights." A 30-piece band composed of freshmen accompanied the singing. Following the songs the speakers were presented.

Two Captains Speak Captain Paul E. Smith spoke first and told of the reasons for coming to college. Then captain of basketball, "Buzz" Hogan spoke on the traditions of the university and how they must be upheld. The last speaker was head coach Burton Ingwersen who talked on the proper college spirit and how it should be kept up.

Schaape mounted a table on the outside railing of the roof garden and his assistants stood on the stone balustrade on the inside. From there they led the green caps in the yells. While they were yelling the traditional cowbells began rattling down from above on the heads of the crowd. Instantly the place became a howling bedlam as the freshmen fought for the cowbells. These were a present from Coasts' clothing company.

Miller for conspiring to defraud the government of their best services in allowing the metal company claim for assets impounded during the war. Team From The Rockies Will Furnish Enough Opposition to Test the Mettle of Coach Ingwersen's 1926 Squad

THE PROBABLE LINE-UP

Table with 2 columns: IOWA and COLORADO TEACHERS. Lists names of players and their positions.

OFFICIALS—Referee—M. Morton (Michigan) Umpire—W. D. Knight (Dartmouth) Field Judge—A. Graham (Grinnell) Head Linesman—R. N. McCord (Illinois) TIME OF GAME: 3 p. m.

By DON MCGUIRE Sports Editor, The Daily Iowan "Are you ready, Teachers?" "Are you ready, Iowa?"

A shrill blast of a whistle, a dull thud as kicker's toe meets pigskin, and Iowa's 1926 football season will be under way.

Colorado Teachers, nineteen husky mountaineers strong, now lie in wait to ally Iowa's hopes for gridiron honors. After a week's sojourn in Des Moines following their 18 to 0 victory over the Kearney, Nebraska, Teachers, they blew into this quiet little hamlet yesterday morning and gave the fans a busy day trying to dope the matter out.

The result of the fans' intellectual labor in the form of "dope" is a rather indefinite score. Some say that Iowa should win by fifty points, while the more conservative confine their estimates to single figures.

Meanwhile, Coach Ingwersen says little as to the probable aggregate score, but spends gobs of time in deep cogitation over some other matter—probably how he will beat Illinois. The chances are good that the Hawks will have little or no difficulty with their foe of the day. In fact, there seems to be nothing but an outside chance for the sons of the Rockies to come through with a triumph. Iowa is always rather certain of winning the first game of the season. Such powerful teams as Oklahoma A. & M. and Southwestern Teachers have been conquered in the opening frays of the last few years and not since 1918 have the Hawkeyes lost the first game. The Great Lakes Naval boys put over a fast one that time by a 10 to 0 count.

Despite rumors to the contrary, Iowa has quite a nice little football team. Bear stories as to its great weakness have been circulated frequently, but its power remains untied, making it all the more dangerous. Sixteen days of hard practice have changed it from a squad of raw material into a fighting, determined aggregation.

The vanquishing of the westerners should be a comparatively easy matter from the point of size alone. And while brains and brawn do not often go hand in hand, the Hawkeyes are not entirely lacking in the former quality. No Phi Beta Kappa keys have been in evidence in the varsity dressing room, but the boys all manage to keep one quiz ahead of a flunk.

The Tutors register in a few instances when the scales are brought into play. Schlosser, an end, is a lean, spare individual credited with plenty of reaching power which may enable him to drag in a few passes. Incidentally, he may drag in a few end runs and help keep the score down.

Kinzie, another future pedagogue, carries 200 pounds about, and cavorts in a guard position in a creditable manner. Hobson, the last of a trio of giants, is another 200 pounder. He works at a tackle berth.

In the backfield are three more men who have built up a good reputation for themselves in Colorado. Captain Brown, Evans, and Glidden are the trio, and they are the ones the Hawkeyes must watch when the Tutors have the ball.

Nick Kutsch, supposed cowboy, who was thrown by a "hobby" horse last spring and nearly ruined for football, will be the man for the westerners to watch. He has been tearing about the field rather promiscuously of late.

However, Nick is not the only insect in the salve, for Iowa will have three more able ball carriers in the backfield. The Hawks have always been noted for speedy relay quartets and the four who will perform today should rank with the best of them.

Schmidt, Grimm, and Skelley will no doubt be Kutsch's mates when the first whistle blows. Coach Ingwersen has not definitely announced the backfield, but from the outfit he has been working lately, indications are that this quartet will begin activities.

Captain Paul Smith will not start the game, but Earl Young will be in his place opposite Harry Rice. While the ends are supposedly the weakest places in the forward wall, this duo should walk about the wings in the most approved style. The rest of the line is a weighty matter, with giants filling every position. Nelson and Jessen, tackles, Hines and Olson, guards, and Brown center, all assume Herculean proportions.

ing every position. Nelson and Jessen, tackles, Hines and Olson, guards, and Brown center, all assume Herculean proportions.

Olson may not start the game, as Coach Ingwersen has been using Chatterton in his place rather frequently, but either man can handle the job well. Chatterton is no small man, tipping the beam at about 235 pounds. He plays a hard steady game, often breaking through to wily lay an opposing ball totter.

"Spike" Nelson has been going strong since his return to the squad a few days ago. He has been opening great holes for his backs to pass through during the last few practices. He may give his mates plenty of chances to reel off some long runs today.

The Hawks have a good chance to start the season off well and, although the westerners may do greater things than are expected, Iowa should find things rather easy. With Schmidt, Kutsch, Skelley and Grimm to do the gaining and a big husky line to aid them on the defensive, chances for a victory are excellent.

Several other men are bound to break into the lineup before the afternoon is ended, as Coach Ingwersen is anxious to give everyone a chance to perform. Cuhel, Don Smith, Bunn, O'Neal, Beers, and Armill will probably get in the backfield. Captain Smith, Twogood, Moore and Armstrong, ends, Van Voorst, Forward, and Holman, tackles, Tege and Voltmer, guards, and Hanley, center, should all desert the bench for the field for a while.

Fashions printed velvet has a bodice of white Novelty Fabrics of the Fall Season

Velvet, both the printed and plain variety, is an important note in the fall mode. This luxurious fabric is used for hats, for day frocks and evening gowns, and as trimming in combination with brilliant metal brocade, it frequently makes the lower portion of an evening wrap, as well as the lining.

Among the novelties of the new season is printed velvet, the designs ranging all the way from carrying modest motifs to conventional striped and checked patterns. This type of velvet is usually used for separate afternoon frocks, and for street outfits of the type sketched today.

Supple chiffon velvet in a smart black and white checked design makes this stunning costume which gives the effect of a coat and skirt outfit on account of the bolero cut in front.

In addition to this striking material, there is the further interest of a picturesque trimming consisting of appliques of black patent leather embroidered in green beads. These motifs appear on the white fabric, bodice, on the long, tight sleeves and on the skirt ends.

This coat dress of black and white ruffled velvet has a bodice of white faille trimmed with appliques of black patent leather.

MAKING MODERN MENUS

The apple is the favorite fruit of the temperate zone and may be used in many ways. Apple sauce, apple pie, baked apples, apples roasted with meats, are only a few of the many ways in which they may be used. Apple dumplings is more like a pudding than it used to be, the dough is rolled thinner and the dessert cut into slices.

Apple Crock Pie
Fill a deep crock with tart apples that have been peeled and quartered. Put over it a baking powder crust rolled out about one-third inch thick, and perforated. Bake for three or four hours until the apples are a rich dark brown and the crust well done. Lift off the crust. Add sugar, butter, salt and cinnamon to the apples, stirring the mixture well. Take another deep crock, put in the apples, and the broken crust in alternate layers. Place a plate and heavy weight on top and set the crock away for from 12 to 24 hours. The "Pie" will then be solid and may be sliced down like marble cake. Serve with plenty of cream.

Apples With Rice
Peel, pare whole and cook your apples in a light syrup of sugar. Arrange in a shallow dish over a layer of rice that has been thoroughly cooked. Put in the oven until it changes color.

Apples in Butter
Peel, pare and core whole apples. Cook them for three-quarters of an hour in sugar and water. During that time garnish the bottom of a shallow baking dish with apple marmalade to which add a layer of currant jelly. Place the well-drained apples on top. Fill the heart of each with a large piece of butter. Frost with powdered sugar and put in the oven until they change color. Serve each apple decorated with a cherry.

Co-Ed Tank Stars Swim First Meet

Seals Feature Novel Aquatic Events in First Splash

The Seals club, women's honorary swimming organization, splashed into the pool for the first swim of the year yesterday afternoon and had an impromptu swimming meet. The events were all novel and keen interest and excitement were manifested by the participants and on-lookers.

The members were divided into two teams of five each. Team one consisted of Perle E. Van Alstine, Catherine Osgood, Lyall Kaufman, Alice Roosa and Leona Kollenbach. Team two comprised Marjorie Plum, Neale Van Oosterhout, Ruth Anderson, Dorothy Wilson and Mrs. Higbee.

Win Relay Brick Race
A relay brick race, the first event was won by team one. It consisted of carrying a brick thirty feet, depositing it on the bottom of the pool, swimming thirty more feet, and touching off the next person. The next stunt was battling a rubber ball with a stick while swimming the length of the pool. The last two persons in this relay swam together almost to the inch, but a final desperate hit by Neale Van Oosterhout, president of the club gave team two winners points.

Team one retaliated by gathering up the greatest number of plates from the bottom of eight feet of water. Catherine Osgood was the stellar performer in this event, bringing up a whole armful of the tin plates.

Carry Daily Iowan

In the last event, each member of the team was expected to carry a copy of The Daily Iowan the length of the pool without getting it wet. Team one finished first, and was acclaimed winner of the meet.

After the stunts, the club discussed plans for the coming year. They expect to have a party for all women interested in swimming, about Oct. 15.

PAUL REVERE

THERE IS NO MORE GLOWING illustration of the progress made in news dissemination than a contrast between the speed with which Woodrow Wilson's war declaration was carried to every corner of the globe and Paul Revere's ride at midnight, warning the Colonists of the approach of the British.

IF PAUL REVERE WERE ALIVE today he would marvel at the speed with which The Associated Press carries news from every nation. He would marvel also at the news gathering facilities of this organization. You read

Lack of Veteran
Debating Material
Perplexes Baird

Coach A. C. Baird Is Forced To Organize Debating Teams
From New Material

According to Professor A. Craig Baird, director of debating, the debate teams this year will have to be organized for the most part, from entirely new material.

Many of the veteran debaters have either been graduated from the university or have entered professional studies which prevent extra-curricular activities.

Of last year's veteran debaters, Harry Stevenson of the Iowa-Cambridge and other debate teams, is studying in Chicago. John Denman, also of the Cambridge team, is athletic editor of a Philadelphia paper. Frank Horack, the third member of the Cambridge team and participant in half a dozen other intercollegiate debates, has enrolled in the college of law.

Louis Carroll, third speaker in the contests against Illinois and Wisconsin, and Ferris Hurd, have also entered the law school. Horace Smith was married during the summer and is studying elsewhere.

The last member of last year's team, Fred Stevenson, is working in Illinois. Of last year's debaters J. W. Blackburn, Henry Newman, Charles E. Nutting, Proctor W. Maynard, and Edwin Robinson remain.

Preliminary Debate
Trials Oct. 11 and 12, Says Director

The preliminary trials to select the intercollegiate debaters for the present semester will be held in the liberal arts auditorium, on the evenings of Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 11 and 12. The semi-final debates will be held on Oct. 18 and 19, and the final one week after the semi-finals. Tryouts for freshmen debate teams will be held during the first week of November.

Teams will be selected for debates with the University of Sydney, Australia, Nov. 30, for the I-M-I debates in December, for the University of California contest here in January, and for the women's debates with Minnesota and Wisconsin.

For the preliminary trials on Oct. 11 and 12, each candidate will present a five minute speech on either side on one of the following topics: "The World Has More to Fear Than to Hope From Science," "The Policy of Educating the Whole Community Has Done More Harm Than Good," and "The Democratic Ideal is a mistaken sentiment."

Morningside Co-eds
Have Athletic Field

SIoux CITY, Oct. 1 (AP)—A $10,000 athletic field for women of Morningside college here, will be formally dedicated next Thursday, and Morningside co-eds will have reached the end of the three-year campaign, in which they resolved to obtain an athletic field without cost to the college.

President F. E. Mossman, Li Han Dimmitt, dean of women, and Katherine Parkhill, director of women's athletics, will be among speakers at the dedication exercises.

Burzette Denies Guilt; Hints
Cousin Involved in Killing

MASON CITY, Oct. 1 (AP)—Errett Burzette, on trial in district court here charged with the slaying of Morris Van Note, rural school director has admitted under cross examination he had been convicted of felony. He testified he was not at the school house the night Van Note was slain there and intimated that his cousin, Melvin, the state's principal witness, was involved in the shooting.

The state claims the two Burzettes went to the school house to steal a stove and that Van Note was killed while guarding the property.

Prof. C. B. Wilson Treasures Faded
Letters of Late Roumanian Queen

An Iowa professor has hidden away in his desk a box of personal letters from the late Queen of Roumania. The proposed visit of the present Queen Marie of Roumania to our country recalls his connection with the Roumanian court during the reign of Queen Marie's predecessor, Queen Elisabeth.

Prof. C. B. Wilson, head of the German department, has a number of letters from Queen Elisabeth, written to him in her own handwriting. Beside attending to her court duties, Elisabeth wrote many books in several languages under the pen name of Carmen Sylvia. She was one of the best known of Roumanian authoresses during her time, and Professor Wilson has a letter from her personally thanking him for his understanding and splendid review of one of her books. She once read an article of his before her court.

Vacaeseo's Letters
Professor Wilson also has many delightfully informal letters from Helena Vacaeseo, also a well known Roumanian authoress. She was a very dear friend of Queen Elisabeth

Sottarelli, Cleveland attorney and two companions, charged with forging and altering government stamps, said that of the $90,000,000 worth of war savings stamps of the 1919 issue that have already been redeemed $336,000 have been found to be counterfeit.

Prof. Baird Plans
Speech Conference

Convention Arranged for High Students and Teachers

Plans are under way for a conference to be devoted to the problems intimately connected with the teaching of debate and oratory, according to Prof. A. Craig Baird, debate coach. The conference is set for October 28, 29, and 30.

The conference is arranged especially for high school students and teachers who are participating in the high school debate series and in extemporaneous speaking contests under the supervision of the extension division and the department of speech of the state university, teachers of dramatics in the schools and colleges and workers in the community drama and in little theatre groups, and those who are planning to teach speech.

Professor E. C. Mabie, head of the department of speech, and Prof. Baird will preside at the different meetings of the conference. Among the speakers are, Warren C. Shaw, head of the department of speech of Knox College, E. S. Woodward, professor of speech at Western Reserve university, Bruce E. Mahan, associate editor of the State Historical society and lecturer in history, Mrs. Pearl Bennett Broxam, chairman of the American federation of women's clubs, G. E. Densmore, instructor in speech and director of the Michigan high school debate league, University of Michigan, and W. Norwood Brillance, professor of speech at Wabash college.

The program is not yet complete but it is known for sure that the conference will open Thursday, October 28, by the presentation of the play, "In the Next Room" by the University players.

Commerce Students
Will Hold Mixer
Wednesday Night

The Memorial Union lounge is to be the scene of a mixer for the commerce and pre-commerce students next Wednesday night. The Commerce club, headed by Ted Ashford, C-4 of Boone, is sponsoring the meeting to help the students to get better acquainted with the members of their college.

The program will consist of a group of talks by Dean C. A. Phillips of the college of commerce and other faculty members and students.

Perfect English

Since English was an acquired language for both Queen Elisabeth and Helena Vacaeseo, some of their phrasing sounds very peculiar now, but they wrote in very correct English. Their script is odd, and there are many words hard to read. The paper used is engraved with unusual patterns and some of the Queen's has her picture in the corner. On the backs of her letters is the royal seal stamped in wax.

Iowa Instructor
Helps Write New Book of Phonics

One of the latest text books written by a University of Iowa professor, is a book entitled, "The Teacher's Book of Phonetics," by Sarah T. Barrows, assistant professor of phonetics in the department of speech, and Anna D. Cordts, instructor in rural education at Iowa State Teachers college.

The book was published last summer by Ginn and Co., of Boston, and is designed to adapt phonetics to the need of the teacher and her pupils. Miss Barrows uses the book as a text in her classes in phonetics.

The various chapters in the book contain the following titles: "The Science of Phonetics Essential to the Teacher of Phonics," "First Aid to Correct Utterance," "The Organs of Speech," "The Sounds of English," "The Foreign Child's speech Difficulties," "The Phonetic Alphabet," and "The Question of Pronunciation."

Radio Bedtime Story "Brings to Life" Lass Missing Three Years

By BEAD COONTZ
Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1926
ALLINGTON, Va., Oct. 1 (EBS)
—Stranger than fiction!

Justin Dyer, Virginia farmer idly turned the dial of his radio and found himself listening to the voice of a daughter he had given up as dead.

Two years ago, Sarah Dyer, then 17, decided that life on the farm with three husky men to feed held no romance for her. Her mother had died three years before.

One afternoon she set the supper table, put the soap on the kitchen floor where father and brothers would see it when they came in, and left.

No trace could be found of her after a long search and Sarah was mourned as dead by the family.

Sometime ago the boys bought the radio that Sarah had so longed for in the bleak days when feeding chickens, getting meat and cleaning up the house was her only excitement. The other evening when the boys were down in the village, Mr. Dyer casually sought to amuse himself with the radio. "I didn't even know what station I had," he says. "I was just sort of turning to see what I could hear, when suddenly I heard Sarah's voice speaking right out, telling some sort of a kid story. My heart jumped right up in my throat for I knew there was not another person in the world had a voice like hers. It had sort of a huskiness—and I'd know her laugh anywhere!" "I got excited and turned the dial and lost the station until they were giving another number. The station was WCR at Newark, N. J. I wired them asking the name of the young lady who told the stories. Sure enough it was our Sarah."

A reunion followed. Sarah explained that she had not written because she feared her father would make her come home, and she had found happiness in work that was a joy and not a drudgery.

She started out to hike to New York that day when the pots and pans and farm chores seemed insurmountable. She received frequent lifts from passing cars and was carried into Newark, N. J., by a Methodist minister and his wife. They took her in their home and allowed her to help with the household until she could find other employment. Through stages of positions as chambermaid, dry goods clerk and telephone girl, Sarah finally found herself in the work that she craved. A kindergarten teacher employed her to help with her little folks at noon hour and with their wraps. Sarah had a way with children and in a short time she was assisting in the schoolroom. Children sat still as little mice when she was telling the wonderful stories that used to pop up in her mind when she was alone on the farm. In a radio program for children she was asked to tell two of these stories. Doubtless many children thrilled to the wonderful escapades of "Tom and Betty," but the invisible listener who got the greatest thrill was a tired farmer—her father.

Ford Fanfare

HENRY FORD'S mastery of mechanics does not end with the making of machines. He is a master of the mechanics of free publicity. Newspapers carry a story of Mr. Ford's action in reducing the days of labor in his plants to five per week. The action is elevated from the sordid level of economics to the more edifying and idealistic plane of humanitarianism. The loud pedal is applied to that part of the plot wherein Mr. Ford wishes to give the workers two free days each week.

There are a number of pertinent circumstances which led the sophisticated to accept these pronouncements with a grain of salt. Mr. B. C. Forbes, a keen observer of industrial trends, recently remarked that other manufacturers are commencing to give Mr. Ford very real competition in the light car field—that the workers will not enjoy a five day week at a six day wage but a five day week at a five day wage, "except as a reward for merit."

In light of these facts, Mr. Ford's reform becomes not so much an act of industrial benevolence as a practical adjustment of his forces to current conditions.

Nor is a five day week a new thing in American industry. For many years the larger railroads have placed their shop forces upon a short day week during the periods of lighter traffic. They did not, however, try to tell any one that they were doing it for the benefit of the employees. It was a device to keep the pay roll down.

Mr. Ford's bid for credit for a benevolent industrial reform would carry more weight if it had been made on the basis of a six day wage. That extra day's pay will be sadly missed in many a humble home.

A Cloud in the West

IT once was well said that the greatest service Admiral Dewey could have rendered his country after the battle of Manila Bay, would have been to turn about and sail away. The battle ended any Spanish naval menace in the Far East, if such ever existed. The occupation of Manila served no naval end except to provide a base for the fleet in those waters.

But the fleet remained and thus was inaugurated an experiment in benevolent imperialism which would have brought despair to the heart of the author of the Declaration of Independence. It was a contravention of that one-time sacred American political doctrine that government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed.

This departure from the political code of the revolutionary founders of this nation has left a bad taste in the liberal mouth. The American conscience is not clear on this score. We have been in the Philippines now for over a quarter of a century. We have imposed an alien authority upon a different race in a land remote from our own—a race whose economic and cultural potentialities are altogether different from ours.

Today a large faction of the Filipinos are yelping fofociferously for liberty. They maintain—and with good evidence—that we promised it to them. Their legislature has passed the plebiscite bill over the veto of Governor-General Wood, and the bill has been passed on to Cautious Cal, who is now giving it the silent treatment.

The Philippine question bulks large in our national problems. It should be settled in accordance with the principles of the fathers, and in conformity with promises made, wisely or unwisely, to the Filipino people. Until it is so settled, it will keep coming up at divers times to plague us.

"That's All There Is—"

"If America steps on the gas for another six years as freely as it has in the last five, the big joy ride will be over," says the St. Paul Pioneer Press, in commenting on the growing menace of the oil shortage. The United States is dependent to a large extent upon oil and gasoline for transportation, industry, national defense, recreation and travel. To curtail these vital activities will stifle and stagnate the welfare of the nation.

People are accustomed to warnings regarding our diminishing resources. Depleted forests came to the attention of the country forcibly a few years ago. Oil has received comment many times, but this is the first time a warning has been sounded from high official sources concerning its probable depletion. The Federal Oil Conservation Board, composed of Secretary of the Interior Work, chairman, Secretary of Commerce Hoover, Secretary of War Davis, and Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, in its report to the president after eighteen months of investigation, said, "there must be natural concern over the future supply of oil because of the manifest dependence of so large a part of our industrial life upon it."

The exploitation of American consumers by foreign-controlled rubber, nitrate, and potash interests should serve as a warning to this nation of what may be expected in the oil business. The Board in its report outlines seven ways in which the industry can help to make certain future supplies:

1. Continued exploration for extension of known sands and deeper sands in known fields.
2. Continued exploration for new fields.
3. Systematic research and experiment upon methods of securing a larger proportion of the oil from the sands.
4. Systematic research and experiment in new methods and cheapened costs in refining and cracking oils, and waste elimination.
5. Co-operative methods in sane development of new fields to prevent wasteful flush-flow and overproduction.
6. Research and application by engine builders of more economical use of petroleum products.
7. Expansion of American holdings in foreign oil fields.

Many people may think the cry of "Wolf!" ill-timed and needless, and that untouched water power resources and shale deposits of Colorado, Wyoming and Utah will provide for our needs in years to come. As long as the price of oil at the filling stations remains normal alarm cries may sound foolish, but when the price of gasoline rises to, say $1 a gallon, people may look about and ask the reason. Then it will be too late. Nature has been robbed.

Penurious Paymasters

ANOTHER striking example of the insufficiency of the pedagog's salary has been brought out by the suicide of Dr. H. S. Murphy, an outstanding anatomist of the veterinary faculty of Iowa state college. Worry over financial matters is the only cause which can be assigned for his death.

Such a tragedy, although not of common occurrence, nevertheless is a reproach upon our present educational system. It is a lamented and well-known fact that, while the work of a professor requires as much preparation, his salary is by no means commensurate with that of the other professions. That Americans should persist in keeping the salaries of our educators on a level with those of common laborers is a mistake for which future generations will suffer.

That Dreaded Age

"RETAIN that school-girl complexion—Don't grow middle-aged." "Do you dread the thirty-year mark? Use our Peach Blow Cream." Thus read the advertisements. Middle Age—that indefinite period of time between youth an old age, a thing to be dreaded, put off as long as possible, this seems to be the general attitude.

The Thirties, conceived by most young people as a time of gray hair, near-wrinkles, and avoirdupois, a time when one's broadest interests lie within the narrow confines of home and office; when one's social life consists in attending the "Palace Theatre" regularly every Saturday night and a neighborly game of bridge on Wednesday; when one's topic of conversation is the wickedness of the younger generation and yesterday's baseball game. Nineteen looks upon thirty-eight with a condescending pity and a conviction of never reaching that faraway age. Nineteen scorns the easy going gait of thirty-eight and walks, rides, swims, and dances at breakneck speed. But does nineteen ever stop to think that thirty-eight may find those things childish and uninteresting?

At middle age, rich with the experience of earlier years, one is just beginning to enjoy life and to taste the fruits of former labors. It is an age of fulfillment, when one has found congenial interests, has decided the question of what to do and has overcome the hardships of getting started. Someone has said that a woman is most beautiful at thirty-eight because then she is lovely with a full, ripened, mature beauty. So it is with everything. Middle age is the highest point, the pinnacle of life.

A man is about as much worth while as the average that might be struck between what he thinks he is, what his friends think he is, and what his enemies say he is.

A rolling stone gathers no boss.

Poems That Live

The Four-Leafed Clover

When Cupid danced in moon's soft light
Across the lawn one summer night
And gaily o'er the greensward tripped,
An arrow from his quiver slipped,
A love-tipped arrow, magic dart,
Intended for some maiden's heart.

The slender messenger of love
Flashed in the moonlight from above
And fell point downward in the grass
And there it struck and pierced, alas,
A little clover leaf, asleep
In its green bed all soft and deep.

And when, in time, the wound was healed,
The little clover leaf revealed,
Instead of a defacing scar,
It's simple loveliness to mar,
Four small green leaflets, strange to see,
Where hitherto there were but three!

THE NECKER

Synopsis—Heliotrope, the fascinating heroine, with the fatal effect on thermometers has been awaiting the advent of the boy friend who is fitting himself for the profession of a Kuppenheimer model. He has not as yet summoned her to the port. Now go on.

In our last issue we left our heroine in terrible suspense. She had been restlessly awaiting the arrival of Percival Holworthy, previously mentioned as one of the warmer boys on the campus who had been paying suit to her. Percival was really one of the big men of the college group, being a leader in the choir, the Y. M. C. A. secretary, and the president of the Epworth League and was considered by the so-called co-eds to possess "that indefinable something" which every girl looks for in the man she hopes some day to snare and lead into the kitchen. In other terminology he was the answer to a maiden's prayer.

As mentioned before in the previous chapter the door bell rang—one of those emphatic rings which only a man of Percival's type could accomplish. Heliotrope took a running broad jump toward the door—but was arrested in mid air by a thought. Two of them, in fact! She hastily powdered her knees and took a sailor's half hitch in her skirt, which shortened aforesaid garment more than perceptibly. Percival must be angry, his adrenal glands must surely be hitting on all seven. He had sounded the bell in an unusual way. She could just imagine him tearing great handfuls of hair from his head—where else did you think?—and beating his temples ferociously in his impatient anger.

Suddenly, galvanized into action, she leaped to the door and opened it and threw her arms around his neck preparatory to one of those bite-sweat white-hot kisses for which Heliotrope was famed. Said osculation failed to materialize however. Percival—for it was he who stood at the door—tore her arms from his neck and threw them out the window—and with a muttered oath sent a well-directed left hook for her jaw. She went down for the count.

(Will the Man at Bay speak to her? She was ashamed—subconsciously of course in order to conform with Dr. Seashore's line of consciousness—of her unmanly impetuosity. Never before had she understood what her mother meant when she said, "Don't chew a fellow's ear until you've asked him in." What happens to Heliotrope? A thrilling installment in our next issue.)

Secrets of Piano Unknown to Many

Instrument Shrouded in Ignorance, Says Piano Tuner

CHICAGO, October 1.—Popular but shrouded in ignorance, the piano in the average American home today is a closed secret, to rich and poor alike, says W. F. McClellan, secretary of the National Association of Piano Tuners.

"Many pianos," he states, "have ceased to be musical instruments. Of 1,000 pianos tested $50 had not a chance for harmony. They were of that class that had ceased to be musical instruments."

Ignorance of Tunes

"Nearly every piano tuner can tell of hearing this: 'Why, I have not had that piano tuned since I bought it,' and 'Its eight years since that piano was tuned and I think it still sounds very good.'"

Change in Styles

"Ignorance, of which this is an extreme example, dates from the time Chickering made the first metal plate piano, and did away with the necessity, one might say, of keeping a piano tuner on the premises. Before that all piano plates were wood. When it is realized that the strain on a plate is between 15 and 18 tons, it is easy to see why the wooden piano was always out of tune. They needed tuning as frequently as violins today."

"Comparative freedom from such frequent tuning sent piano dealers and buyers to the other extreme. Instead of telling buyers pianos needed periodic tuning, dealers spoke only of the piano's cost, and nothing of the upkeep. So it is no exaggeration when our President Deitzmann said there were 8,000,000 pianos out of tune, in America."

THE LAUNDRESS

A New Yorker's Daybook

By BURTON RASCOE

(Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1926) NEW YORK, Oct. 1 (EFS).—As a sort of barometer of the New York taste in drama at the present time it may be noted that among the plays current on Broadway are "Sex," "A Night in Paris," "Kept," "Loves Me, Loves Me Not," "Cradle Snatchers," "The Great Temptations," "She Couldn't Say No," "Two Girls Wanted," "The Girl Friend," "Honest Liars," "The Adorable Liar," "The Blonde Sinner," "Naughty Riquette," "One Man's Woman," "Scandals," and "No Trespassing." Two other plays, "The Shanghai Gesture" and "Lulu Belle" are more daringly sexy than their names.

Miss Gladys Unger, author of "Two Girls Wanted," has written a violent protest to the dramatic critics who described her play as "clean" and has pointed out the racy situations in it. She begs them, "For heaven's sake, don't say my play is clean." She is apparently afraid that the adjective is enough to kill any show on Broadway. It is also a curious commentary upon the blunted sensibilities of the critics who describe a play as "clean" which would have caused the police reserves to be called out five years ago.

Ben Hecht tells this story on Carl Sandburg, the poet. Sandburg's first newspaper experience was on the address of a newspaper published for a time as an experiment in Chicago. It was a newspaper more given to comment than to news and its policy was based upon the theory that the underdog was being exploited and imposed upon by the "interests."

Sandburg's vague humanitarianism and proletarian sympathies at the time made him fit in rather well as the sole reporter of the latest daily newspaper. But when the paper suspended publication, Sandburg had not distinguished himself as a news gatherer and so had some difficulty in finding a job. A number of budding novelists then buzzing around the Daily News office held Sandburg in vast respect as a poet and they succeeded in getting Sandburg to join the local staff of that newspaper.

Bo-Broadway

By J. VAN RAALTE

"Abie's Irish Rose" is the cleanest show on Broadway. "Cradle Snatchers" is the dirtiest. "Abie" opened May 22, 1922, and from the present outlook will still be crowding the Republic theater May 23, 1922.

"Cradle Snatchers" is one of the two shows that survived the torrid term. August was hot; but "Cradle Snatchers" was hotter, and here we are on the front piazza of autumn with the play still doing business at the old stand.

"Abie" is clean and has endured for over four years. "Cradle Snatchers" is dirty and has outlived its other contemporaries.

Has cleanliness or filth anything to do with a show's longevity? Who knows? At the Little Theater there's a play moved in called "Two Girls Wanted." Following is an advertisement they ran in one of the New York papers the other night:

"Don't Tell 'Em It's Clean! Tell about the love scenes. And the Laiffs—Laiffs—Laiffs. And the Beds—2 (count 'em 2). And the Couch with 2 couples tangled on it and under it. And the Beautiful Girls who undress. And the Indecent Vampire. And oh, yes, Nydia Westman's Hugable—Tickable—Giggable Personality. It really isn't dirty, but for Pete's sake—lay off that clean stuff."

And then a lot of owl-eyed dilettantes foregather and ask each other at stated intervals: "What's the matter with the American stage?" There's nothing the matter with it that a little flea soap won't cure.

Queen of Roumania to Dedicate Room in Oregon Castle

THE DALLES, Ore., Oct. 1 (AP)—Queen Marie of Roumania will signify the transformation of Maryhill castle into an international museum when she visits it during her American tour to dedicate a Rumanian room.

The castle, which crowns a high bluff overlooking the Columbia river about 20 miles east of here, was started a number of years ago when Samuel Hill, good roads advocate and an international traveler, was expected to entertain King Albert of Belgium.

Recently it was announced the castle was to be converted into a museum in which exhibits from various countries of the world would be housed. The Rumanian room will be the first room set aside for an exhibit.

MERRY LOCKE falls in love with an unknown man whom she passes every day on the street. To fall in love is nothing to new to Merry. She has been doing it ever since she was sixteen years old. But this time she feels she has found the Real Thing.

On the morning of her twentieth birthday, Merry decides that somehow or other she will make the Man in Gray, as she calls the stranger, speak to her. She deliberately drops her handbag at his very feet when she meets him on the street at noon. But instead of speaking to her, as she hoped he would, he gives it to her and gravely goes on his way.

That afternoon Merry learns that she has failed in two of her speed tests at business college, and will have to take them over again. Merry dreads breaking the bad news to MOMS, for the business course is expensive.

She goes home, and as she is gloomily staring out of her bedroom window, she sees her sister, CASSIE, drive up to the house with the Man in Gray. Cassie says she cannot remember his name when Merry questions her about him, but tells her that he is a lawyer she has met, and that he offered her a lift home.

That night, DAD gives Merry

five dollars for her birthday, and Merry takes her youngest sister, Jinny, to the circus with it. MOMS insists that DERRICK JONES, a college boy, who lives next door, go with them. A lion breaks loose in the tent, and in the wild rush for the entrance, Merry finds herself separated from Derrick and Jinny, and in the arms of the Man in Gray. He takes her home, and kisses her at the gate, against her will. Merry knows that she has fallen in love with him, but she doesn't want this love affair to end like all the rest of hers—in "petting parties."

(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY!)

CHAPTER VI
Merry tried to shake her head, and say that she never had seen him in her life until tonight—as she doing her best to forget it. She wanted him to forget that she was the girl who tried to flirt with him—to "pick him up."

But she couldn't shake her head. All she could do was to hang it, until her pointed chin touched her breast.

When they turned into Chester street, the tall light of Derrick Jones' little car was just whisking into the driveway of his house.

"I see now what your young sister meant tonight, when she said I drove 'Cassie' home this afternoon," the Man in Gray said, when they stopped before the Locks' rambling old house. "Cassie must be Miss Locke, who works for the Kaufman company."

Merry nodded, and opened the door of the car.

"Yes," she answered quietly. "I saw you drive her up here today. I told her I'd seen you before and asked her who you were. She couldn't remember your name—"

"You have seen me before, then haven't you?" the Man in Gray asked.

They were standing beside the gate now, under the shadow of the old willow that overhung it. All around them was the soft fragrance of a June night—the mingled scent of rambler roses that grew over the door, of wet grass, and new leaves.

"You know I've been watching you for days, don't you?" he asked, and his voice was only a thick, husky whisper. He took her slender body between his hands suddenly, and held her as he had held her in the circus tent.

But, with a little sharp sigh, Merry slipped away from him, and closed the gate between them.

She was in love with this man. She knew it now.

But she didn't want him to kiss her. She didn't know why.

She was saying over and over to herself, "I wish I'd never let anyone kiss me before! I wish I never had! I wish I never had!"

He leaned over the gate, and put his hands on her shoulders, drawing her to him—and he kissed her. Once on her mouth.

"I love you," he said, and she sensed rather than heard him say it.

When he kissed her again—this time on her eyelids—they were wet with tears.

The darkness under the willow tree was thick and soft like black velvet.

Merry couldn't see the face of the man who held her in his arms. But she stayed where she was, with her head against the rough shoulder of his coat, while his fingers stroked her wet eyelids and cheeks.

"You're crying," he said. "It's my fault. I had no business kissing you. You're tired; too, aren't you?" Under the soft linen of her dress he could feel that she was trembling all over. "I won't keep you any longer," he went on, holding her tighter than before. Then suddenly he let her go. "Good night. I'll see you tomorrow, won't I?" Good night.

Merry was still leaning against the white fence pickets when his car turned the corner of the street. Her fingers were raised to her lips. Aching with a happiness and an unhappiness that she had never known before in her life, she turned and went slowly toward the house, where only her own bedroom window made a golden oblong against the darkness.

As she started up the sagging wooden steps, a sudden sharp sound broke the night-time stillness—the sound of a screen door being slammed.

Merry knew that that was Derrick Jones' way of letting her know that he had been watching her all this time. She shrugged her shoulders, and went into the house.

"I'm through with him, anyway," she said carelessly to herself. "Through with him for good. Through with him, and everybody like him!"

She slipped off her shoes, and crept on her stocking feet up the stairs and reached her own room in safety.

Jinny, in her little pink nightgown and bedroom slippers, was sitting before the open window tinkering with the radio she was trying to make.

She looked up, as Merry came in, and put one finger to her lips.

"Moms on the war path!" she whispered. "She saw you come home with the Mysterious Stranger, and—"

But before she had time to finish, Moms had flung wide the door and was standing in the opening.

She was wrapped in her faded old bathrobe, but she had pulled on her stockings and shoes. Her eyes were blazing. A spot of color burned on either cheek bone.

"I was just coming down for you, my lady!" she cried furiously. "What do you mean by coming home at this hour of the night?"

Merry opened innocent eyes. "This hour of night?" she repeated. "Why, Moms, it's only ten o'clock!"

"Don't you talk back to me!" Moms snapped. "Who was the man who brought you home?"

Merry looked questionably at Jinny. She wondered how much she had told her mother about the evening's adventure. But Jinny's head was bent low over her radio, and she was whistling under her breath as if she were alone in the room.

"The very idea of your letting someone you never saw before bring you home in his automobile!" Moms' voice rose high and indignant.

"What if a lion did break loose in the tent? A strange man can be a lot more dangerous than a circus lion. Let me tell you! And you shouldn't have gone to the circus, in the first place."

Merry sat down on the edge of her bed and began to slip out of her clothes. Sometimes, when Moms began to scold, she kept it up for a very long time, and Merry was sleepy and wanted to go to bed.

She tried to shut her ears to the sound of Mom's high-pitched voice. "Why did you do it?" was the next thing she heard her say, after a long flow of angry words. "Why did you do such a dangerous and dreadful thing? You knew it was wrong, didn't you?"

"I knew what was wrong?" Merry asked.

Moms made a gesture of despair. "Why, what you did, of course!" she all but shrieked. "Joy riding home with a stranger!"

Merry breathed a long sigh. "He wasn't a stranger," she answered. "I've known him for a long time. And he's a friend of Cassie's, besides. He brought her home from work this afternoon."

Moms looked flabbergasted. "Who is he?" she asked after a long pause. "What's his name?"

Merry bit her lip. For the first time it occurred to her that she had forgotten to ask the Man in Gray his name.

"Moms," she asked, "do you think I'm lying to you? Don't you believe me when I tell you that I know that man?"

"Then what's his name?" Moms asked. She was as persistent as a fly on a hot day.

"Gray!" Merry answered desperately. "His name's Gray—Mr. Gray! He's a lawyer. Cassie knows him! You can ask her about him in the morning if you don't believe me!"

Moms stood a moment longer in the doorway, looking from one to the other of the girls. Then, with a kind of groan, she backed into the hall and shut the door after her.

"Is his name really Gray?" Jinny asked in a hoarse whisper, as soon as she was gone.

Merry shook her head. "No," she answered sulkily, "but I had to tell her something, didn't I? If I hadn't have stood there talking, all night."

She got into bed, and Jinny turned off the light and was soon asleep.

From the other side of the room Merry could hear her soft, measured breathing.

But she, herself, couldn't sleep.

She was wide awake, now. Wide awake, and in the arms of the unknown man once more. She could feel his mouth on hers again, and his arms around her, in the soft darkness of the June night.

Still thinking about him, she dropped off to sleep an hour later, when a clock somewhere across the house-tops was striking two.

"I wonder what his name really is," she said to herself drowsily. "I must be sure to ask Cassie again, first thing in the morning.

But she overslept the next morning.

By the time she got down to breakfast Moms had cross-questioned Cassie about the Man in Gray. And she was ready for Merry.

"You said that fellow's name was Gray?" she accused her as she sat down to her toast and coffee. "His name isn't Gray at all! It's Gaines! Cassie just remembered what it was and told me."

"Gray or Gaines—what difference does it make?" Merry asked with an indifferent shrug of her slim little shoulders. "I'll probably never see him again, anyway."

Moms snorted and set down her coffee spoon with a clatter. "Him! From the way you were talking to him at the gate last night I should say you'd probably see him again," she said. "And I shall certainly ask him what really happened last night. Trying to get the truth out of you is like getting sugar out of a turnip."

"This was an unpleasant fact. From babyhood Merry had never stuck to the simple truth when she thought that a fib would do better. She could look you squarely in the eye and tell you, without the flicker of an eyelash, that black was white, and when she was telling an untruth, she looked as straight-forward and innocent as a child. Her green eyes would open as wide as innocent flowers.

"They were wide open and innocent now, as she looked at her mother. And Moms believed what she said. After all, Gray and Gaines were pretty much alike. It was easy to make a mistake about them.

The hands of the clock on the wall of the classroom seemed to stand still that morning.

But at last it was twelve o'clock, and Merry was free.

She fairly flew into the dressing room to powder her nose and put on her hat.

It was raining outside—a fine, warm drizzle like mist.

Through it Merry walked, as happy as if the sun were shining.

Half way to the corner, where Eighth street crosses Fir avenue, she caught sight of the Man in Gray. His hands were locked behind his back, and he was studying a group of pictures in a stationer's show window.

Merry came up behind him.

"Good morning, Mr. Gaines," she said, and he swung around and caught both of her hands in his. He didn't say a word, but stood there looking at her and holding her hands, until she began to be nervous. She pulled her hands away, blushing and laughing.

"You'll have a crowd gathering around us if you do that much longer," she said, and they started away down the wet pavement, side by side.

Yanks and Cards Battle Today in Epic of Baseball History fans for the first act of the 1926 diamond drama.

All reserved seat tickets for the opening game, as well as for the second contest on Sunday, were sold out two days ago and an unprecedented rush is anticipated early tomorrow morning for the gates leading to the unreserved sections of the stand that accommodate some 35,000 spectators.

Speculators Out

With the pre-battle spirit aroused by an unusual influx of fans from all parts of the country, ticket speculators reaped a rich harvest with the supplies they were able to obtain. Prices were quoted as high as $25 for single opening game seats, and from $50 to $100 for three game strips covering the first, second and sixth contests scheduled here.

New York's enthusiasm has been sharpened to an unusual degree, accustomed as the metropolis has become to have a hand in the world's series. But the main detonation of excitement is anticipated in St. Louis, where the thrill of participation in the modern classic for the first time will accompany the continuation of hostilities there on Tuesday.

Yanks Favorites

The Yanks, starting the series on familiar grounds and before a home town crowd, have been installed slight favorites, with odds of 6 to 5 figuring in most of the wagers reported tonight, but among critical observers the outcome is regarded as a toss up.

Nearly $1,000,000, it was estimated, already has been wagered on the series with neither contender lacking for support.

The two southpaw stars of the rival clubs, Herb Pennock of the Yanks, and Willie Sherdel of the Cards are slated for the opening game's test of pitching skill. Miller Huggins, diminutive bench pilot of the Yankees, made known his choice definitely after a final workout at the stadium today. Rogers Hornsby, brilliant young playing manager of the National leaguers, did not commit himself finally but virtually conceded that Sherdel would draw the initial assignment.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1 — The New York Yankees and St. Louis Cardinals, victors in two of the most desperately fought campaigns in major league history, come to grips tomorrow in the opening conflict of their battle for baseball's world's championship.

Seldom have two more brilliant or closely matched contenders faced each other in the season's climax and few, if any, have had a setting as spectacular as that in prospect for this struggle of inter-sectional rivals.

Expect Record Crowd

City Fans Half and Half in Series Choices; Mayor Wants Cardinal Win

By MAURICE JONES

Local fans are about equally divided in their opinions as to the outcome of the world's series baseball games. An invoice of Iowa City fandom shows that those who are qualified to draw conclusions in this matter are about as numerous in support of one league as of the other.

Mayor J. J. Carroll's forecast—that he is unable to decide—amounts to what all the other opinions would amount to were they added together and divided by two. He, like so many others, hopes for a Cardinal victory, as "they have not captured the pennant for a long time. I like that man Hornsby," he says.

Bremer Picks Yanks

Harry Bremer, the well known local merchant, feels sure that the Yanks will win but that the Cardinals will grab two of the games. "The effect of Rogers Hornsby's mother's death will discourage him and cause him to slack up," Coach Rollie Williams prophesied "that the Yanks will win as they have a bunch of hitters. Although their pitching staff isn't quite as good as the Cardinals, I think their fielding averages up a little better. The Yanks have had more experience in the world series competition."

Whetstone Chooses Huggins

"Baseball isn't much in my line of sports interests," stated Robert Whetstone, "but the Yanks will probably win although I hope they do not. St. Louis has been the underdog or in the cellar, so to speak, for quite a while, and they deserve to win."

A member of the political science department, Bruce E. Mahan, thought that the Cardinals will win. "They will win purely through fight. Because of the death of Rogers Hornsby's mother the team will give all they have for him," he said.

Yanks Racine's Bet

"I think that the Yanks will win," said Fred Racine, "St. Louis is playing over their heads, although I would like to see them win. St. Louis has a good bunch down there and they back their team right."

As a result of interviewing two of the students there seems to be as much contention among them as of the local business men.

Buzz Hogan, A3 of Osage, captain of the basket ball team, when stopped on the street said, "Oh, Gosh! I don't know—lets see—who is playing—the New York Giants and—" "No the New York Yanks," interrupted the inquirer. "Oh, yes," went on Hogan, "I think the Yanks will win. They have some good sticklers and Babe ought to be able to knock out a few home runs."

Waldo Geiger, A4 of Iowa City, and "man about town," answered, "The Cardinals are going to win. There is no question about it. The Yanks are heavy hitters but they do not have as heady players as the Cardinals do and the Cardinals have a better pitching staff and more fight. Sure the Cardinals will win."

Athletic Department Will Sell Programs

Official programs of 46 pages, issued by the department of athletics will be sold at the Colorado Teachers-Iowa game this afternoon.

Accurate names, numbers and positions of the men on each squad, the probable line-up as well as pictures and information on leading Iowa and Colorado players are contained in the program. Athlete salesmen will sell them both outside and inside Iowa Field.

"Red" and Layden Meet at Tri Cities

Special Bus Will Take Iowa City Fans to Rock Island

Grange versus Layden. That, in short, is a most interesting item in store for football fans, when next Sunday, Harold "Red" Grange, former Illinois star and Phantom flash of the gridiron, brings his New York Yankees to Rock Island, Ill., to do battle with the Rock Island Independents in the American Professional league football game. Elmer Horsemann, one of the famous "Four Horsemen" of Notre Dame, is to be at fullback for the Islanders, and a mammoth crowd is expected to overflow Browning field to see these two stars in combat. Special busses have been chartered from Iowa City, Dubuque, and Burlington, and an effort is being made to have a special train run from Campaign. Already advance ticket sales have reached a radius of one hundred miles from Rock Island.

With Grange will come such stars as Eddie Tyron, Colgate flash and the east's leading scorer for several seasons, Wesley Fry, Iowa's former

First Round Fall Tennis Tournament Sets Start Today

Many tennis matches are expected to be played today in the opening round of the fall net tourney. The courts are now in good condition, so that opponents are urged to communicate with each other to arrange the time of play. Tuesday has been set as the limit for first round matches, while next Saturday is the deadline for the second round.

Weather permitting, all varsity tennis candidates are to meet with "Dad" Schroeder, Monday afternoon. Freshmen will report Wednesday for the first practice session of the year.

It has been rumored that the 69-year-old bishop of London, The Rt. Rev. Arthur Foley Winnington- Ingram, is an enthusiastic tennis fan. If true, the vespers speaker may exhibit his talent on the university courts.

Alice Roose, present singles and doubles title holder, will find strong competition in Ruth Kenefick, runner up in the state tennis tournament held at Fort Dodge last summer, who is a student in the university.

Miss Kenefick was defeated in the state finals by Mrs. Floyd W. Ebers three times state champion, 6-2, 7-5.

Mothers Win in National Golf Tourney for Second Time

Glenna's Victor Goes Down Before Mrs. G. Stetson

Mrs. Wright Goss Meets Stetson in Finals

[By The Associated Press]

HAVERFORD, Pa., Oct. 1.—Two mothers won their way to the final round of the national women's golf championship at Merion today for the second time in the thirty-two years history of the event.

The victors were Mrs. G. Henry Stetson of Philadelphia, who went nine holes in a sensational finish to defeat twenty-year old Virginia Wilson of Chicago, conqueror of Glenna Collett yesterday, and Mrs. Wright D. Goss, Jr., of Short Hills, N. J., who triumphed over the champion of her home state, Mrs. Cornhand Smith, 3 and 2.

The struggle between matrons, eleven years ago at the Onwensia club of Lake Forest, Ill., Mrs. C. H. Van W. A. Gavn of England 3 and 2. Four previous championships have been won by married women, the title holders having been Mrs. G. S. Brown of New York in 1895, Mrs. H. Arnold Jackson of New York in 1914, Mrs. Vanderbeck and Mrs. Dorothy Campbell Hurd of Philadelphia in 1924.

Virginia Eyes Throne

The interest of the gallery today was in the youthful conqueror of Miss Collett and under its penetrating focus became the serious candidate for a vacant throne.

The esse and grace with which she formerly had handled her iron shots, particularly in rescuing her from the depths of Merion's yawning sand pits, were missing today. But the breaking point was not reached until victory seemed well within Miss Wilson's grasp, as she passed the fifteenth hole with a lead of two up.

Here the girl's game appeared to collapse, she lost two of the last three holes, and then went down to ultimate defeat in the second extra hole struggle of the tournament.

Faulty Playing

Neither player could draw from her clubs the golf they had displayed yesterday. They were particularly faulty in their approaching, but it was the older and more experienced Mrs. Stetson who rallied at the crucial stage of the match.

Mrs. Goss played by far the best golf of the day to win over Mrs. Smith. It was her long game which dominated the match today. Of the tee she was from fifteen to twenty-five yards ahead of Mrs. Smith, while her approaching and putting were accurate and steady.

Although she was able to cover the first nine holes in forty strokes, two under par, and the best outward card of the match play rounds, Mrs. Smith kept in the flight with masterful pitches and was only one down at the turn.

Mrs. Smith finally squared the contest at the twelfth, but from

Prep Gridsters Tie With West Liberty

Fight Scoreless Battle on Mud-covered Gridiron

University high football players battled to a scoreless tie with West Liberty in their first game of the season yesterday.

Fighting at a line-plunging game, interspersed with end-runs, the game was battled on even terms on a mud-covered field. Fumbles were frequent throughout because of the slipperiness of the field and ball.

Spears, halfback, McGinn's, tackle, and Blackmere, center, saved the yardage for the local preps by recovering fumbles which might have been costly. Tompkins and Bowers guards, and Dennis, right halfback, were the stars of the University High team. Both guards stood out on defense and Dennis made the long run of the game, getting away on a wide end-run for thirty-five yards on the slippery field before being brought down by the West Liberty safety. That was University High's sole chance to score.

Captain Brown, veteran fullback, suffered a broken collar bone and Roberts, right tackle, left the field with a broken nose. Due to the scarcity of grid material in the university school, both men will be keenly missed while their injuries are healing.

Only thirteen men were used by University High in the game.

Three Hawk Grid Veterans

Here are three of the Hawk veterans who will start the game today. Don Hines (left) is playing here on she was left behind as Mrs. Goss rallied with a stroke of brilliant golf which was not to be denied.

Solem Depends on Ewart in Football

Line Star Plays Third Year for Drake University

[By The Associated Press]

DES MOINES, Oct. 1.—In Lyle Ewart of Grinnell, Drake university has one of the outstanding foot-ball linemen of the West, according to Coach Ossie Solem.

Ewart weighs 225 pounds. He is playing his third season on the Drake university eleven. Last year he was virtually the unanimous choice of sport writers for a guard position on the mythical All-Missouri Valley team.

On offense, Ewart plays a tackle position because of his great ability as a blocker. He plays guard on defense, where his knack for breaking through and smashing plays mazes him a terror to rival teams.

Playing against Nebraska, the Navy, Oklahoma, Mississippi, Kansas, Ames, Notre Dame and Grinnell on succeeding Saturdays this season, Ewart will strive to make good the claim of his admirers that he is one of the greatest linemen developed in the Missouri Valley conference football in recent years.

A. A. Alexander Gets Contract for College Street Viaduct

Capital City Man Outbids Ten Others

Builder of University Heating Plant Hopes to Begin Construction Work by October 15; To Complete Structure May 1

The city council, meeting last night in its regular monthly session, awarded the contract to construct the College street viaduct to A. A. Alexander, Des Moines. Alexander's bid of $36,943.50 was lower by nearly two thousand dollars than any other bid presented. The figures were also lower on each of the eighteen items covering the cost of construction. The bid was accompanied by a certified check for $2500.

Ten bids had been received at the opening yesterday, and were read before the afternoon session of the council and a large crowd of spectators including contractors, construction engineers, and representatives of various firms which are interested in furnishing materials for the project. Representatives of bonding houses were also read at the evening session.

Alexander, who is completing his work on the university heating plant at this time, and who is a graduate of the University of Iowa, expressed a desire to begin work on the bridge by October 15. By doing this he hopes to beat the weather at its own game and get the concrete of the foundation set before the winter has a chance to stop the viaduct's progress. Foundations and abutments must first be erected. Alexander expects to complete the work by the first of May.

The second lowest bid was that of the Cedar Rapids Construction company with figures at $38,520.90. Third came the Capitol Construction company, Des Moines, with $38,886.05, while the William Horrabin Contracting company, Iowa City, was fourth with $39,072.75. Six other bids were received, namely from the Widell company, Mankato, Minnesota; W. C. Mott and Sons, Iowa City; J. F. Nebergull and Sons, Davenport; A. Olson, Waterloo; M. A. Burnett, Marengo; and William L. Nusser, Iowa City. Nusser was high with nearly $46,000.

Other business of the council included the acceptance of preliminary sketches for new quarters for the city firemen, presented by O. A. Carpenter, local architect. Carpenter estimated the cost of the completed addition, which would be built between the present fire station and the police station, at between $2800 and $3300. A resolution was passed ordering the presentation of further detailed specifications at the next meeting of the council.

The quarterly reports of the mayor and chief of police were read. According to the figures from the mayor's office a total of $3,236.15 has been collected, including $1190 in fines, $1150 in costs, $803.45 in licenses issued, $56 in fees, and miscellaneous items totalling $36.30.

The report from the chief of police showed that in the last quarter there had been 441 arrests, most of them for disregarding and violating traffic ordinances. Quarantine signs posted numbered 24, including twelve cases of the measles and eight cases of diphtheria.

A short plea, at the beginning of the session, was entered by Dr. C. W. Wasson of the university for additional fire-fighting apparatus. Also a second reading of the Kenderline resolution to raise the salaries of the clerk and city marshal was laid on the shelf for further consideration.

Following this a ghost of sixteen years standing concerning the need for street improvement in Chautauqua Heights was raised. As the city's ownership of these streets and alleys is in doubt a committee was appointed to consider the data in the case.

W. R. Harte, city attorney, raised, toward the end of the session, a resolution to pass an ordinance to prohibit parking on bridges, on viaducts, and in alleys. This resolution met with considerable opposition but was seriously considered in view of the new College street bridge which will be completed in the spring.

Numerous minor petitions were laid on the shelf, while all bills were considered and orders made out for their payment.

City High Gridmen Battle Here Today

Meet Lone Tree This Morning in First Home Game

This morning at 10 o'clock Iowa City high will take the field against Lone Tree for the first home football game of the season. Iowa City has a fairly strong team this year. Last Saturday they held East Des Moines to a 6-6 tie. Little is known of the Lone Tree team but they are expected to furnish strong opposition.

The red and white has seven veterans back this year around which to build a winning combination. Their line is the lightest it has been in years and their backfield is fairly heavy. On account of their light line, the team resorts to an aerial game chiefly, though their backs can hit the line when needed.

Captain and center, Collins, who has been laid up lately with injuries, is not in tip top condition yet but will probably start the game tomorrow. If he is unable to play James will be shifted from guard to center and McComas will take his place in the line.

Taxpayers Flock Daily to Office of County Treasurer

Late arrivals have been flocking to the office of county treasurer, Charles L. Berry these last few days to pay their taxes. There will, nevertheless, be delinquencies which will amount to several thousand dollars. The treasurer's office has been open to the public as late as nine o'clock in the evenings for several days.

"We will not be able to state definitely the amount of tax receipts for a week or so," said Mr. Berry. He explained that the office would be so swamped with mail that it would take at least that long to check all of it. Tax receipts have been paid more promptly this year than for some time, and the average daily receipt totals for the past week, close to $50,000.

John Concling, alias John Rushing, wanted in Iowa City, Grinnell, and Chicago for forgery and house-breaking, has been arrested in Las Cruces, New Mexico, according to a wire received late yesterday from the Las Cruces sheriff by Detective O. E. Carroll.

Concling, the object of a nationwide manhunt, in a statement to New Mexican authorities upon his arrest, implicated a brother and shifted all blame from his own shoulders, declaring that they "had the wrong man." Police remain skeptical.

Aside from the alias of "John Rushing," Concling assumed various other names. He has three times served penitentiary terms, two of them being at Anamosa and Stillwater, Minnesota. By national criminologists he is regarded as an "old timer" and his arrest yesterday is greeted with interest.

Detective Carroll left yesterday afternoon for Grinnell to make arrangements for Concling's return to face state charges. Grinnell also prefers charges of forgery against him.

The management will cater to women bowlers as well as men.

City Clubs Will Plan Booster Week

All of the luncheon clubs of the city have been invited to participate in a combined luncheon Monday, October 11, at the Chamber of Commerce in connection with the "Civic Week" campaign which is being organized by the chamber for this month.

The chamber has announced that a gavel is being made from solid walnut taken from the railing on the stairway in Old Capitol. This gavel, bearing a suitably engraved plate, will be presented to the club having the largest percentage of its membership present at the luncheon.

Weight To Speak

The luncheon will take place on the opening of Civic week and Dan Weigle of St. Paul will speak on "The Community Clearing House." Mr. Weigle is well known among civic workers. He was formerly secretary of the chamber of commerce of St. Paul and has addressed assemblies in many towns upon civic problems.

He will come to Iowa City on October 10 and will remain for several days, speaking daily. A huge union meeting of church people is being arranged where Mr. Weigle will deliver his address, "A City With a Soul."

Pledge to the Public

ON

Used Car Sales

1 All used cars offered to the public shall be honestly represented.

If a car is suitable only for a mechanic who can rebuild it, or for someone who expects only a few months' rough usage on a camping trip, it must be sold on that basis. Each car must be sold for just what it is.

2 All Studebaker automobiles which are sold as CERTIFIED CARS have been properly reconditioned, and carry a 30-day guarantee for replacement of defective parts and free service on adjustments.

This is possible because tremendous reserve mileage has been built into every Studebaker, which it is impossible to exhaust in years.

3 Every used car is conspicuously marked with its price in plain figures, and that price, just as the price of our new cars, is rigidly maintained.

The public can deal in confidence and safety only with the dealer whose policy is "one price only—the same price to all." For, to sell cars on this basis, every one of them must be honestly priced to begin with.
