The Mexican Crisis

SINCE Secretary of State Kellogg's protests against the land petroleum acts in June, 1925, there has been a growing estrangement between Mexico and the United States that has at last reached what may well be considered a crisis. Several times Washington has sent protests to the Mexican government; but although President Calles desires to pursue an amicable path, he has not altered the situation in the least. American capital always has encountered difficulty in Mexico. But the Mexicans also have an argument on their side.

Since the invasion of Cortes, foreigners have looted and carried away the riches of that mountainous country. Foreigners today possess more of Mexican wealth than the Mexicans themselves.

There has been a general outcry against aliens by the Mexicans in the revengeful form of nationalism. Too long and too often they have seen foreigners invade their lands, usurp the natural resources, and dictate to the advantage of outside interests. Mexican leaders are determined to bring into being, if possible, a nation that will be independent in the main of the rest of the world and in particular the United States. Their cry is "Mexico for the Mexicans."

The Land and Oil Laws

President Calles has at heart the ambition of Mexico. He has regarded the recent conflict with the church as a "minor detail." He wants and is succeeding in reclaiming arid waste lands, educating the nation, and establishing a degree of Mexican capital and ownership. Anything which stands in the way of these ideals is to him an enemy of Mexico.

The land acts declare that no foreigner shall hold real estate within 100 kilometers from the frontiers and over 50 kilometers from the seacoast. Similarly laws in the District of Columbia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Washington, Texas and in other of the United States prevent foreigners from holding real estate. The Mexicans can hardly be declared by Americans to be unfair on this law.

Through the petroleum law the exploiter or concessionaire, who does not own the surface but only sub-soil privileges, is open to exorbitant demands on his production. He also may be involved in expensive litigation through doubtful ownership deeds.

The Outsiders' Viewpoint

Mexico is not averse to foreign capital entering the country. The leaders clearly realize the necessity of home production being bolstered up by outside strength. But what they protest against is the continued domination of aliens.

The Mexican has a supportable plea, but the foreigner also comes in for consideration. American men and American money went into Mexico in response to assurances by the Mexican government that capital invested in that country would be protected. New factories, smelters, mines, and reclaimed lands made possible by this foreign exploitation have employed thousands of Mexican laborers at wages double what they had received.

These American investments amounted to more than a billion and a half dollars. Mexico has failed to protect this property. Through strikes, revolutions, and what not, property valued at $50,000,000 has been destroyed due to the lassitude of the government. By the latest movements, the Mexican government has deliberately entered upon an official policy of confiscation of American property under the guise of improving the agrarian laws.

What Can Be Done

From a strictly individualistic viewpoint both Mexico and the foreigner are right. Yet there is such a clash of policies that almost any solution will inevitably be unjust. Again, a just solution may not be the practical one.

Certainly Mexico should not be permitted to carry out measures where billions of dollars are at stake and may be taken as a precedent wherever American capital is invested. What steps can possibly be taken by the United States which will not smack of the detested imperialism?

If the United States would no longer recognize the Calles government, a revolution would likely follow that would destroy foreign property more than the land and oil laws. A concept of war is repugnant to the American and also would cost dearly as much as the property involved.

Climax on January 1

A threat will probably not bring the Mexican government to terms. The government, perhaps more stable now than ever before, is determined. The United States has but two weapons—diplomacy and force. President Coolidge prefers the milder policy.

On Jan. 1 next the wholesale confiscation of alien property is to take place according to the Mexican land and oil laws. It is unlikely that the Hague will hand down any decision, so the two powers must compromise between themselves.

There can be but one solution. Mexico can only heal its wounded nationalistic pride by time. Were Mexico really capable of utilizing its own resources, it would be done by the citizens. Wonderful strides have been made by the Mexican populace towards understanding and controlling its political and economic heritage. Drastic land and oil laws will not, it must be admitted, make up for a deficiency that exists among the entrepreneurs of Mexico. They can best learn by the example set by foreigners.

The Mexican government might profitably and effectively attain its end by diplomatically limiting foreign exploitation in the future. But for the present land and oil laws there is only one conclusion—they must be repealed.

Two Ideas

THERE is a strong tendency in these days to confuse religion with morality.

Religion is a definite thing which is only indirectly concerned with morality. It is, to quote Carlyle, "The thing a man does practically lay to heart and know for certain, concerning his vital relations to this mysterious universe, and his duty and destiny there."

Morality, on the other hand, is a mixture of kindness and common sense. It is action with regard to the welfare of others.

Religion is a natural result of the mystery and fearfulness of life. It leads, generally, to a conception of God and His eternal purposes; and such a conception is likely to result in a program of moral living.

The Mohammedans cannot be accused of lack of religion; and yet their morals seem to us very perverted. The strong attempts which people are making today to rationalize religion and to translate it in terms of science and morals, is right; but the very seed of religion must always remain a mystery and can be translated only in terms of faith.

The Falling Rodeo

SOCIETIES for the prevention of cruelty to animals and popular protests through the newspapers have shown that New York has a distaste for the western rodeo. One judge succeeded in imposing a fine of $10 on a cowboy for sticking a spur into a tired bull. The New Yorker can not understand the finesse of roping and throwing a bull and sees in every contest a repetition of tactics that puts the bull on the small end of the tally.

Because of this same lack of enthusiasm, two hundred imported Cossacks were stranded in New York when they attempted to present a stupendous Russian rodeo.

Even here in the middle west interest has gradually been waning in the rodeo. Three years ago a production of western skill drew enormous crowds. Since then audiences have been on the decrease in enthusiasm and numbers.

Only in the west can the real skill of the cowpuncher be appreciated. In the east it is a spectacle that soon loses its charm. Like every other amusement, the rodeo demands a certain amount of critical intelligence on the finer points of play to maintain a spectator's interest. As long as the east remains in ignorance of cowpunching, the rodeo will be preeminently a sport of the west. Its great popularity three years ago was due only to its unusualness. When this has worn away, the traveling cowboys will retreat to the land where their skill is understood.

Poems That Live

Music I Heard

Music I heard with you was more than music,
And bread I broke with you was more than bread;
Now that I am without you, all is desolate;
All that was once so beautiful is dead.

Your hands once touched this table and this silver,
And I have seen your fingers hold this glass.
These things do not remember you, beloved,
And yet your touch upon them will not pass.

For it was in my heart you moved among them,
And blessed them with your hands and with your eyes;
And in my heart they will remember always,
They knew you once, O beautiful and wise.

We are going to be independent and turn out a column without any pictures today so there. We are doing this for two reasons—first because those who must have their art can get a Herald and Examiner tomorrow, and second because our predecessor in whose honored footsteps we tread as nearly as possible turned out a successful product without any portraiture. However, for those who simply cannot live without them they will be reinstated Tuesday so do not make any advance arrangements with your family undertaker.

CHAPTER LVIII
The morning of Merry Locke's twenty-eighth birthday was a day she never was to forget so long as she lived.

It began so ordinarily as a day can begin.

She sat up in bed, yawning. Then suddenly she remembered that paperhangers were coming to paper the hall and the downstairs sitting room.

It was not until she was out of bed, standing before the mirror that she remembered that this was her birthday. Her twenty-eighth birthday!

Could she really be that old? She leaned close to the mirror and looked at herself in the glass.

The sunlight from the windows beside her poured over her in a yellow flood that found few flaws in her face.

The twenties did not write very much history on a woman's face, and except for the little tired lines at the corners of Merry's eyes, she looked much as she had looked when she was twenty.

"I can't believe I'm really twenty-eight," she said to herself, her own eyes meeting the gay, deep ones in the mirror. "First thing I know I'll be an old maid."

She laughed at the thought, and then wondered if she ever would be married. George Lest was still coming to see her every Wednesday and Sunday night, as he had been coming for five years.

George never would marry while his mother lived. He said so. He had only enough money to support himself and her. Poor George.

"But I don't believe I'd marry him even if I had the chance," Merry thought, as she picked up a brush and began to fluff out her yellow hair.

She was almost contented, these days. She worked all day, and she read a great deal. The old days when nothing but a movie magazine or Vogue looked good to her, were gone. She had a card at the public library, and she took out two or three books a week.

She liked stories about married life best. Of stories of adventure. The other kind, the books about the love of a man and a girl, she never read. They made her unhappy and restless.

She didn't know why. But she learned to leave them alone, just as she had learned herself not to think about Tony Gaines.

She never thought of him any more. That is, hardly ever.

But that morning something happened that filled every niche and corner of her mind and heart and soul with him, again, after eight long years!

"I wish you'd stay home today and help me," Moms said to her over the hurried untidy breakfast in the kitchen. "I ought to wash all the woodwork before the paperhangers come. And I'll never be able to do it, alone."

So, instead of starting off to the beauty shop with Lillie, Merry went upstairs and put on an old blue calico house dress that had once belonged to Helen.

"All right, here I am," she told Moms cheerfully, when she went downstairs. "Where will I begin? I don't know whether I'll be any good at this kind of work or not."

To Moms' disgust she put on a pair of red rubber gloves.

"I don't know how you can work in those things, Merry Ann Locke," she said severely, "but do your best and use plenty of elbow grease. You can start in with the front hall."

It was the first time she had ever tried to scrub woodwork in her life, and like all beginners, she made quite a job of it.

The space between the wall and the mop-board that ran around the floor was filled with dust. After trying to wash it out Merry decided to try scraping it out.

In the drawer of the kitchen table was a ruler and she slipped it between the baseboard and the wall and went to work. Little rolls of dust, like gray mice, came tumbling out, and then, suddenly, the ruler stuck.

Merry pulled it out, and slipped it down behind the base-board once more.

But once more it stuck. Something was holding it there—something that felt like a wad of paper. All at once the ruler brought it forth from its hiding place. It was a wad of paper. A folded wad of envelope with a two-cent stamp and a special delivery stamp on it!

Merry's mouth began to tremble. Without looking at the handwriting on the envelope she knew what it was—the special delivery letter from Tony Gaines! The letter that had disappeared so mysteriously, so long ago.

CHAPTER LVIX
Shaking all over she got up from her knees, and went upstairs to her own room.

There she opened it and read—the letter that she should have read on a summer night, eight years ago. The letter that could have changed her whole life. If someone had not folded it up and hidden it then, behind the old warped base-board!

"Dearest," Tony had written, and Merry shut her wet eyelids as she looked at the word. It was almost like hearing his voice say "dearest" close against her ear.

It was a minute or two before she could see again to read, through the blinding tears that flooded to her eyes.

"Dearest, I am going away in a few days. To Billings, Montana, where my father's old friend, Judge Bannerman, is going to take me into his law office. I've been waiting to hear from you, and as your mother, no doubt has told you, I've called at the house twice. Let's not be fools any more, Merry. Let's get married now, today, and go to Montana together. TONY."

Merry sat still as a statue, holding it in her hand. The boyish impulsive letter that the boy, Tony, had written eight years before. She wondered if the grown man, who had married in Montana, ever thought of that letter now. If he ever thought of that last night he had spent here, in this town, probably waiting for her to telephone him.

Suddenly, with a little whimper, she cried, she turned and flung herself across the bed, shaking with terrible sobs. Shaken with helpless grief, crying as she had not cried for eight years, and knowing as she did it, that it was too late to cry now.

It may have been a half hour afterward that she began to wonder where she had found it.

It was perfectly plain that it had not fallen there. It had been folded twice and then stuffed down behind the baseboard. The blackened creases showed exactly where it had been folded.

Merry sat up, wiped her eyes, and lived over the long-ago night in her memory. No one had been in the house that night but herself and Moms and Lillie and Cassie.

Moms, of course, had not touched the letter. She had liked Tony Gaines.

Jinny—all at once, something that Jinny had said that night flashed across Merry's mind. Jinny had said that Cassie had been looking at the letter, while she sat beside the table, waiting for Morley Kaufman. Of course, Cassie had hidden the letter!

"I'll never forgive her if she did," Merry declared.

That afternoon at four o'clock she was on her way to Cassie's big house on Overlook Heights.

She sat in a corner of the street car, watching two or three young flappers across the aisle. Cute young things with shingled hair and painted cheeks and bright eyes.

"They're nice, but at twenty—just about the age I was when Tony wrote this letter to me," Merry thought, holding it between her hands. "I wonder if he'd still like me if he could see me now."

She knew she was as pretty as she ever had been. The flappers every now and then stole an admiring glance at her. For all their youth, she was better looking than any of them.

"But I've changed," she thought, as the car started the slow climb to Overlook Heights. "Maybe I don't look much different, but I feel shop-worn, somehow."

She thought once more of Cassie, who, without any doubt, had hidden the letter from her. And her face was set to the mood of hatred as she started up the gravel drive that wound through green lawns to Cassie's proud house on Overlook hill.

The Johnson county license plate numbers for 1927 have been changed from "58" to "47" and applicants for automobile licenses will save considerable time in remembering their 1926 license number when applying for next year's.

On May 15 all unregistered automobiles in Johnson county will be collected and sold by the sheriff to pay for the state's assessments on the cars.

Sorority Swimmers Contest Tomorrow

Six sorority teams, representing one half of those entered in the women's intramural swimming team tournament, will meet in the first preliminary contest tomorrow at 5 o'clock. The second preliminary, with six more teams competing, will be held the following evening. Survivors of the preliminaries will then compete in the final meet Thursday, Dec. 2.

Chi Omega, Pi Beta Phi, Alpha Xi Delta, Alpha Delta Pi, and Delta Zeta meet tomorrow night. Kappa Delta, Gamma Phi Beta, Delta Gamma, Kappa Alpha Theta, Red Caps, and White Caps splash it out Tuesday evening.

A prospective winner is hard to choose, as most of the teams have one "star" while the rest of the swimmers are of more or less unknown ability. Pi Phi, Chi O, and Kappa Delta have more than an outside chance to win the team championship if they are able to beat the independent teams captained by Mildred Augustine, fancy diver, and Leona Kolfenbach, dash expert.

Each organization will be represented by a team of four with two substitutes. Each team will be composed of two novices and two experts. The meet will be divided accordingly. There are eight events plus a relay, four for novices and four for the advanced swimmers.

Womens' Intramural Tournament Will End Thursday

Only one person from each team may compete in each event. Points will only be awarded in the final tournament. A large silver trophy cup will be awarded to the champion team.

A student intramural committee composed of five girls and an instructor are managing the meet. They will also make arrangements for the intramural basketball and baseball tournaments following swimming. Members of the committee are: Perole Ellen Van Alstine, A3 of Gilmore City, Lyall E. Kaufman, A4 of Spirit Lake; Ruth Bruechert, A4 of Omaha, Neb.; Catherine Osgood, A3 of Iowa City; and Helen Springer, A4 of Leon. Miss Margaret Lea is the faculty advisor.

Eighth Grade to Have Charge of Weekly Assembly

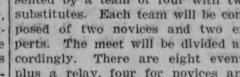

The eighth grade of University high school will have charge of the assembly program, Monday morning from 9 to 10 o'clock. Each class of the six-year high school takes its turn in conducting the weekly assembly. Monday, E. G. Stowell, head of the Boy Scout movement in Iowa City will speak and A. M. Kubo will entertain the assembly with some Hawaiian guitar selections. The remainder of the assembly hour will be taken up by announcements and meetings of various classes.

Carnegie Springs Surprise Victory Over Notre Dame 19-0

Skibos Outclass Irish in Greatest Upset of Season

Donohue, Tech Star, Batters Rockne Line at Will

[By The Associated Press] PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 27 — Notre Dame's national football championship hopes were shattered here today when the South Bend warriors went down to an overwhelming defeat by the rugged Carnegie Tech eleven 19 to 0. A crowd of 45,000, a record attendance for any sport event at Forbes Field, went into ecstasies as the final whistle blew, and tore down the goal posts. Efforts of the police to control the surging fans were fruitless.

Flanagan Stopped Christy Flanagan, flashy Notre Dame halfback who rose to great heights with a long run to beat the Army, was stopped by Carnegie every time he carried the ball or attempted to turn the tide with forward passes. Hearnden, his mate, bore the brunt of what little opposition was offered by the Rockne men. Only once did the Rockne clan threaten the Carnegie goal. That was in the fourth period when the visitors worked the ball to the Skibos' one-half yard line with the aid of a forward pass. Carnegie's defense braced and held Notre Dame for downs.

Little Bill Donohue, fleet halfback of the Skibos, circled Notre Dame's terminals and battered the line almost at will. Sharing honors with him were Letzelter, Mcfort, and Harpster. The latter dropkicked two beautiful field goals in the third period. The first period resolved itself into a punting duel and Notre Dame's first string men were sent in at the start of the second period.

Women's Basket Ball Season Opens Tomorrow Afternoon

Another season of basketball for university women begins tomorrow at 4 p. m. when the junior and senior class players have the opening practice. Last year, two tournaments were played, one by teams representing the four liberal arts classes and the other by intramural organizations. This year three tournaments are planned—"color," class, and intramural.

The "color" tournament will be played first. All of the girls who have signed up for basketball by Monday evening will begin practicing for it. Any girl in the university may play in this tournament, as there will be colors enough for as many teams of girls as come out to practice.

Coaches for the teams will be Margaret Lea, Ruth Beckley, and Adele Kimmi, physical education instructors. Red Grange Out as Team Bows to Quakers 13-6

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 27 (AP)—Philadelphia's first major league professional football championship was brought here today when the Philadelphia Quakers defeated the New York Yankees, 13 to 6, before nearly 20,000 persons at Shibe Park. "Red" Grange, who was severely injured in New York Thanksgiving day, did not play and sat on the bench while spectators yelled "We want Grange."

Tank Squad Holds Inter-varsity Meet

Killibrew Team Beats McClintocks in First Duel

Captain "Bob" Killibrew's team defeated the team led by John C. McClintock 35 to 33 yesterday afternoon in the first competitive drill of the year for the varsity swimming squad. The races were closely contested in all cases, although the times turned in were only fair according to Ivan J. Klingaman.

Several men showed marked improvement over work of last year. Russell Goldman, getting into his first varsity competition, tied with M. I. Carter, 200 yard breast stroke flash of last year. E. I. Marble, although placing second in the 150 yard back stroke, turned in the best time of his short experience in that event.

Summary of events: 160 yard relay: Won by Killibrew, Pattison, Lloyd, Choate. Fancy diving: Won by Keyes (M); Fairgrave, (K); second; McDonald, (K), third. 40 yard dash: Pattison, (K), and McClintock, (M), tied for first and second; Killibrew, (K), third. 200 yard breast stroke: Carter, (K), and Goldman, (M), tied for first and second; W. P. Marble, (M), third. 150 yard back stroke: Won by Lloyd, (K), first; E. I. Marble, (M), second; Patten, (K), third. 100 yard dash: Won by McClintock, (M); Killibrew, (K), second; and Nelson, (M), third. 440 yard swim: Won by Clearman, (M); Phillips, (M), second; Lando, (K), third. 300 yard medley relay: Won by Lloyd, Simpson, Pattison, (K).

In the water polo game following, Captain Killibrew's team took the honors.

Missouri Places Three Players on All-Valley Team

Abundance of Stars Makes Selections Difficult Task

[By The Associated Press] KANSAS CITY, Nov. 27—Having polled coaches, officials, and sports writers throughout the Missouri Valley, the mythical all-Missouri Valley team compiled by the Associated Press represent the consensus of virtually every authority in the Valley.

Confronted with a wealth of material, the compilers were forced to ignore some players who undoubtedly deserved mention and one coach in making his selection commented that "the second team probably could beat the first." The team, however, represent the men who received most mention and whose records undoubtedly stand out in the annals of Missouri Valley football for the 1926 season.

Virtually every member of the second team was nominated by one or more of the coaches and officials for a place on the first eleven and several players not included in either team were nominated for second team berths.

- FIRST TEAM: Bacchus, (Mo.) Left End; Stiner, (Nebr.) Left Tackle; Weissinger, (Okla. Ag.) Left Guard; Wallace, (Okla.) Center; Tombaugh, (Kan. Ag.) Right Guard; Lindenmeyer, (Mo.) Right Tackle; Coe, (Ia. St.) Right End; Clark, (Mo.) Quarterback; Potts, (Okla.) Left Half; Pressnell, (Nebr.) Right Half; Meeter, (Grinnell) Fullback. SECOND TEAM: Roy LeCrone, (Okla.) Left End; Martin, (Grinnell) Left Tackle; Brion, (Kan. Ag.) Left Guard; Davidson, (Kan.) Center; Studebaker, (Mo.) Right Guard; Kibinger, (Ia. St.) Right Tackle; Delmege, (Drake) Right End; Peery, (Okla. Ag.) Quarterback; Holsinger, (Kan. Ag.) Left Half; Everett, (Drake) Right Half; Howell, (Nebr.) Fullback.

Clark of Missouri Valley High School

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 26 (AP)—Bert Clark, Missouri half back, earned first place among Missouri Valley conference football players with a total of 42 points this season, nearly half of his team's total of 98.

Carl Voltmer Rates High

Carl Voltmer is expected to have little trouble with Phillips in the 175-pound class, but as in the case of Yegre he may get a surprise due to Phillips hard work.

Still in Men's Gym

Logan is looking good in the 125-pound class, as is Maloy. The two will fight for the place on the varsity, but their greatest trouble in the university championships will be "Chuch" Seaman, a freshman from Cherokee, twice state champion. Seaman can hold his own in stiff competition, and the little fellow will put up a great scrap with the more experienced wrestlers.

Iowa College Conference Names Workman Chairman

DES MOINES, Nov. 27 (AP)—Hoge Workman, football coach at Simpson college, was elected permanent chairman of the Iowa conference at a meeting of coaches and officials here today. Coach Koch of Western Union college was named vice president and Coach Sanderson, Penn college, secretary.

Wrestlers Prepare for Title Scraps

Closest Competition to Come Among Trio of Welters

Hard work is in line for all the wrestlers who are going to compete in the university championships, Dec. 15 to 18. About thirty men are working out for the first matches of the 1926-27 season. The best battle is expected in the 145-pound class when three wrestlers of practically equal caliber will meet to decide the championship. These men are Scott, Frank Voltmer, and Flater. Scott, because of his consistent daily workouts appears to have a little edge over his two rivals, but the other two, especially Flater, are developing fast. Flater was not in school last year, but competed on the freshman team two years ago.

Michaels Has Opposition

Former captain Michaels, will receive hard competition from Scheyeli and Montgomery, two likely contenders for the 145-pound crown now held by "Mike."

Coast Team Falls Before Smashing Ames Attack 20-0

First Intersectional Defeat for Any Western Team

[By The Associated Press] LOS ANGELES, Nov. 27 — A smashing line attack gave the Iowa State college Cyclones a 20 to 0 victory over the University of California, Southern Branch, here today, the first defeat of a Pacific Coast team in an intersectional football contest this season.

The soggy field proved exactly to the taste of the Cyclones and they pushed the Bruins about through three fourths of the game. The Ames machine breezed down the field on straight football for three touchdowns. Lindbloom and Miller, hard fighting Iowa halfbacks, each scored a touchdown in the second period, Thomas adding an extra point on one, but failing on the second.

At the opening of the second half, Lindbloom and Miller alternated in a sixty yard march down the field, but missed a touchdown by six inches. The Cyclones took the ball on an intercepted pass in the fourth and swept down the field to the scoring line, Weiss, quarterback, going over.

The Bruins had the edge on the contest in only one quarter, the first. They were in scoring position, however, but once.
