Coolidge Hunts on Game Preserves

Bags Pheasants and Turkeys During Day's Shoot

SAPELO ISLAND, Ga., Dec. 27 (AP)—On the well-stocked game preserve of Howard E. Coffin, President Coolidge tested his marksmanship today on live quail and found it good. Three pheasants and two wild turkeys roared in the presidential game bag when he returned with his party to the island mansion of the Coffins.

So far as is known these were the live birds he shot before the president's gun. Shooting caught his fancy in Wisconsin last summer when he showed considerable ability at shooting clay pigeons.

Again during his recent Thanksgiving vacation in Virginia Coolidge hit the high scores at the traps, but when he went hunting for quail, five shots went amiss.

Hunt English Fashion
Today's hunting took place on little Sapelo island which is separated from Sapelo island proper by a narrow channel and a bar of marsh grasses. Accompanied by Col. Omar Latrobe, his military aide, Alfred W. Jones of Brunswick, Edward Vorey, a relative of Coffin, and Col. E. W. Stirling of the white house secret service Mr. Coolidge left Sapelo in a speedboat for the game preserve. The hunting itself was done in the English fashion. The president and Colonel Stirling, the only other member of the party to carry a gun, stationed themselves at one side of a broad field, while the others worked their way through the surrounding brush, turning the birds in the direction of the field. As they flew past, Coolidge and Colonel Stirling alternately blazed away, while the remainder of the party, standing nearby, concolored or congratulated the hunters on the success or failure of their shots. Stirling brought down three pheasants.

Planes Bring Mail
The wide sombrero presented to the president during his vacation a year ago last summer in the Black Hills was chosen by Coolidge as part of his equipment today.

Another hunting party is planned for tomorrow morning when Mrs. Coolidge may be a member. There is a possibility that if she goes along, the first lady of the land may try a shot or two with a light fowling piece provided by her host.

While the president was hunting today Mrs. Coolidge posed for Frank O. Salisbury, an English artist who accompanied the Coolidges here to make a portrait of the president for the New York Genealogical and Biographical society. Coolidge consented to sit last week, but it was not known until today that Mrs. Coolidge also was to be pictured. Coolidge had his first sitting this afternoon.

A plane of the army air corps arrived today with mail from Washington for the president.

Officers Hunt for Wreckers of Santa Fe Fast Passenger

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., Dec. 27 (AP)—Evidence that the Missionary, Los Angeles to Chicago flyer of the Santa Fe railway, was wrecked late last night as the result of a deliberate plot sent officers scouring the San Bernardino mountains today for clues to the identity of the persons responsible for the derailment of, with serious injury to three passengers.

Speeding down grade from Cajon Pass toward the Mojave desert at 60 miles an hour, the train was piled up 35 miles north of here when it hit a gap left by the removal of one rail. A chair car and six Pullmans went into the ditch, overturning. The engine was derailed but remained upright.

Most of the several hundred passengers were only shaken up.

W. H. Burbage, attorney for the railway at Winslow, Ariz., was dangerously injured about the hips. Mrs. F. J. Mackie, wife of the assistant general manager of the road, was badly bruised, and George Searle, trainmaster at Needles, Cal., suffered bruises and shock.

Railroad officials said the spikes had been removed from the rail and it had been shifted to one side. The plotters had taken care to preserve contact with the signal circuits that run through each rail, the officials said, otherwise the block signal system would have halted the speeding train.

Belief was expressed that some disgruntled person plotted the wreck. A robbery theory was scouted because no valuable shipments were carried on the train.

Cops Motive for Pirro

Dec. 27 (AP)—Desire for revenge was the motive which drove 21 years old, and seriously injured, Des Moines here last night, following his police from Knox after the shooting. Belief was expressed here to day is entertained by the motive.

The wounded man to shed light on the motive.

Meat Packers See 1929 as Promising

CHICAGO, Dec. 27 (AP)—The coming year's outlook for the meat packers is fairly promising, the Institute of American meat packers said today in releasing a summary of business conditions for the closing year.

Total meat production and consumption for 1928 was about the same as 1927, the institute said. Beef showed a decline of 10 per cent due to higher prices but was offset by increases in pork and lamb.

"The year has been fairly satisfactory for the packing industry," William Whitfield Woods, president of the institute, said, "and has been markedly better than 1927. Earnings for the fiscal year ending in October exceeded those for last year, but were curtailed by the fact that the usual seasonal increase in hog marketing and decrease in values occurred earlier than ordinarily, and this affected larger inventories than might otherwise have been the case."

American Girl in Turkish Hoosegow for Teaching Bible

By SHIRLEY KIRKE
NEW YORK, Dec. 26—In the reign of Abdul Hamid, the "Red Sultan," a cablegram telling of the imprisonment of a young and beautiful American missionary in the Turkish hoosegow would have sent a wave of horror and indignation over the United States.

It probably would have been followed immediately by excited activity in Washington, international complications and the dispatch of gunboats to the Bosphorus.

Nobody Has Gotten Excited
It is therefore interesting that although word comes from Constantinople to the effect that Edith Sanderson, pretty Omaha, Neb., teacher, has been tried, convicted and sentenced by an Ottoman court to a term in jail for converting young Moslem pupils to Christianity, nobody has gotten very much excited about it.

Least of all the young missionary herself.

The pretty missionary's school is situated in Trossa, a quiet, ancient, picturesque town in the mountains, where Americans are popular and have done a lot of good. So old Judge Nizamidine, who happens not to be fanatical about anything except his bridge, sent a policeman to call politely and request the attendance in court of the teacher.

She duly appeared and stood trial. The diaries of some of her pupils indicated a certain amount of sectarian Christian propaganda had been going on. It seems that Miss Sanderson had given Bibles to several young converts and had "discussed" the New Testament with them. In addition one of the girls testified that they and the teachers put on their best dresses on Sunday, but worked at their classes on Friday, which is the Moslem Sabbath.

Law Bars Religious Propaganda
These certainly weren't serious offenses nor did the judge imply that Miss Sanderson had done anything particularly dreadful. She had, however, violated one of the laws of the land, a statute which prohibits the spreading of religious propaganda in the schools.

The court therefore imposed a nominal sentence of a fine of three Turkish gold pounds, about $13, and a term of three days in jail, which he told Miss Sanderson courteously, she might serve at her convenience. Indeed he suggested that she might "rest up" the three days in her room and call things square.

Thus the world gradually becomes more tolerant and by the same token a pleasanter place to live in.

10.1 Listed as 1927 Death Rate in Iowa

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27 (AP)—Recording the national death rate for 1927 at 11.4 persons per 1,000 population, the department of commerce reported today that of the states Idaho had the lowest rate with 7.1 per 1,000 population and the highest rate of 13.9 occurred in California, Vermont and New Hampshire.

The national death rate was estimated from the deaths reported in the 42 states and the District of Columbia which have official systems of registering births and deaths.

In 11 states of large Negro population, separate death rates were figured for white and Negro inhabitants, and in all of these the Negro death rate was materially higher than the white. The highest death rate for Negro inhabitants was 21, assigned to Kentucky, while the lowest was 12.5 in Arkansas.

The 1927 death rates per 1,000 population by states included: Illinois, 11.4; Iowa, 10.1; Minnesota, 9.2; Missouri, 11.6; and Nebraska, 8.9.

New York Police Commissioner to Try Murder Case

NEW YORK, Dec. 27 (AP)—Police Commissioner Grover A. Whalen tackled the Arnold Rothstein murder mystery today.

Fortified by several new leads which he said the new chief of detectives had found, the commissioner spent an hour and 40 minutes in going over the case with District Attorney Joseph H. Banton and five assistants.

After the conference Whalen had no definite news to make public and reporter had to content with his announcement that a plan for the immediate and future conduct of the investigation had been agreed on and that "the results" would speak for themselves.

Asked whether he had "any immediate hopes" of arresting Hyman Biller, who with George McManus and two men identified only as Roe and Doe, have been indicted for the murder, Commissioner Whalen said he had "the highest hope" of arresting Biller shortly.

Ex-Business Man Positively Identified as Bank Robber

ALGONA, Dec. 27 (AP)—John Robinson of Fairmont, Minn., arrested at Welcome, Minn., yesterday, was "positively identified" today by Herman Kraus of Fenton, Mo., one of two robbers who took $15,000 from the Fenton State bank early Monday, police said.

Robinson was returned here with his automobile and is held in Kossuth county jail. His attorney, who arrived today from Fairmont, declared that Robinson is innocent and can furnish an alibi.

Meanwhile, Sheriff L. E. Massey and state agents who cooperated in the capture of Robinson are said to be on the trail of another man believed to have been involved in the robbery. Officials declined to reveal the locale of the search.

WELCOME, Minn., Dec. 27 (AP)—John Robinson, former Fairmont, Minn., business man, was arrested here late Wednesday for questioning in regard to the holdup of the Fenton State bank at Fenton, Ia., of more than $15,000 early Monday.

Sheriff L. E. Massey of Algona, accompanied by Mayor Herman Kraus of Fenton and a Martin county official, with Robinson in custody returned to Algona, where Robinson is held in the Kossuth county jail. Robinson denied any knowledge of the robbery.

Child Suffers With Toy Motorcycle in Throat, Pneumonia

CINCINNATI, Dec. 27 (AP)—The condition of Frank Brooks, one and one-half years old, confined in a hospital here suffering partial strangulation from the effects of a toy motorcycle lodged in his throat, remained serious today. Surgeons attending the case said there had been no change.

It is 12 days since the child accidentally got the toy in his throat while eating a prize package of popcorn. All efforts to remove the toy have been fruitless. Recently pneumonia set in.

His general physical condition, fever, pulse, heart and lungs have been too weakened by pneumonia to operate. No one in authority would venture a prediction as to how long the child would live under the existing circumstances.

Watchman Killed by Drug Robber

NEW YORK, Dec. 27 (AP)—A powerful poison found in the coffee of a lifeless night watchman and the rifled files of a chemical research laboratory today gave police a working background in a hunt for a robber-killer.

The robber worked alone, but he put out of opposition three men and had a bag end of the night prowling about the Guggenheim brothers laboratory in search of what he wanted—drugs, valuable metals or secret formula. Two containers of polluted coffee were found beside the poisoned watchman.

Police tonight were seeking James Baker, 22 years old, former employee at the laboratory. The poison which police believe killed the watchman apparently had been taken from the only unlabeled container in the place. Revenge in a grudge was suggested as a motive.

Insurgent Leader Taken in Mexico

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 27 (AP)—The war department was advised by the mayor of Chalco, state of Morelos, today that the insurgent leader, Maximiliano Viguera, has been captured and in compliance with the new ruling against summary execution is being sent to Mexico City for trial.

Viguera is represented as one of the most feared and ruthless of those whose activities occasionally took them near Mexico City. His depredations so affected tourist travel that the national highways commission offered a 5,000 pesos reward ($2,500) for his capture.

Families of Lawmakers

PIERRE, S. D. (AP)—Five members of the state assembly convening next month have been preceded in South Dakota's legislative chambers by their fathers. Three others will follow in the footsteps of brothers.

Honolulu (AP)—Japanese residents of Hawaii are presenting Emperor Hirohito of Japan, with a 24-foot Hawaiian canoe of Koa wood. The canoe will carry four persons.

"Main Street" Woman Goes to France to Commence Crusade Against War

MENOMONIE, Wis. (AP)—A woman from this city of 5,000 has gone to France to lead a feminine revolt against war.

Mrs. Adalin Wright Macauley carries the banner of peace for 5,000,000 mothers, wives and daughters of world war soldiers in the allied armies. She is president of the women's section of Fidac—"Federation Internationale des Anciens Combattants"—or the Inter-Allied Veterans' association.

Fidac includes the American legion, its auxiliary, the British legion, its women's division and members of similar organizations of every nation which fought under the Allies' colors.

"We plan to develop a program of international education for children," Mrs. Macauley explained, "teaching them of the lives and customs of children of other nations. Thus a friendship of understanding will be created among the children of nations."

Mrs. Macauley will open international headquarters in Paris as a "clearing house" for the work of women of all nations for peace. She will lead a campaign among the women of Fidac to instill thoughts of arbitration and to banish ideas of war in the younger generation.

After a board meeting of Fidac official in March, Mrs. Macauley will tour the allied nations. She will address national conventions of women, wives and daughters of former service men, and hear their ideas for furthering international peace.

Year in Bed Proves Inspiration for Chicago Woman to Get Fame in Writing

CHICAGO, Dec. 27 (AP)—A bedfast invalid for more than a year, Margaret Ayer Barnes, of Chicago, diverted her mind by writing.

Today her play, "The Age of Innocence," adapted from Edith Wharton's novel, is Katherine Cornell's starring vehicle in New York, and eight of her short stories have been published under the title of "Prevailing Winds."

Mrs. Barnes is the wife of an attorney. They have three sons, 16, 13 and nine years old. She is one of the three Ayer girls whose activities long have interested Chicago. The others are Mrs. Samuel Chase, a writer of verse, and Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, former democratic national committee woman from Illinois and author of two books.

The Ayer family lived on Michigan avenue in the days when it was Pine street, and, on this boulevard now hedged in with tall apartment houses, kept a cow. Says Mrs. Barnes: "We probably were the first white girls born west of the Alleghenies."

During most of the week days of winter Mrs. Barnes writes. The week-ends are devoted entirely to her husband and sons. They all go off to a shack near Highland and "sort of camp out."

Mrs. Barnes is a graduate Bryn Mawr. "Although always fond of literature, she did not seriously consider writing until a year's illness left much idle time on her hands.

"I work every day from about 9 o'clock to 4," she said. "Some days I do not accomplish much; others the ideas come thick and fast."

She has pronounced ideas about housework and working outside. Of that she said:

"My theory is this: Women who have homes and children and cannot afford to have their housework done should give up ideas of a profession. On the other hand, a woman who can afford to hire household help, and who wants to do creative work, should let nothing stand in her way. Educated women of today spend 60 per cent of their time doing useless, profitless things, such as playing bridge in the afternoons, and sitting in as puppets in endless committee meetings wherein a dominating few pull the strings. What do they get out of it? Yet they keep it up, rounding the same cycle every year. Many of them could be doing creative work."

NEW YORKER DESIGNS "AIRPORT OF FUTURE"

An aerial perspective of the "triarc" landing field conceived by Gavin Hadden, New York engineer. He believes its advantages over circular and triangular designs will win it universal adoption by airport builders. Its principal attractions are its great economy of space and of runway paving. Hadden has applied for a patent on the design.

What Has Gone Before

In the middle of the night on May 31, Martin Templeton, an English lawyer, was awakened by the raging of a terrific wind-storm without. Shortly afterward, he received over the telephone a general alarm warning the public that the land in southern Europe had subsided and was flooded by the waters of the Mediterranean. A similar catastrophe was feared in England.

A few minutes later, part of the house collapsed in the fury of the storm. Martin's wife, Helen, was wounded in the side by falling glass. Leaving her and their two small children in the temporary shelter of a marlin net near the ruined house, Martin went foraging for food.

Suddenly he was aware that the house was sinking. A few minutes later he saw that the rushing waters of the ocean had flooded the countryside, leaving him marooned on a hilltop. He knew that his wife and children must have drowned. The next day, by a long and difficult swim, he reached a larger body of land which the waters had not submerged. Here, after a long illness, he lived a lonely and primitive existence, hoping day after day for rescue that did not come.

Helen, left alone in the marlin net with the two children, puzzled over the significance of the sea and a catastrophe. Hours passed and Martin did not return. Then, as she looked casually at the other side of the pit, a wave splashed over the rim. Startled at first, then realizing what it must mean, she seized the children and started to carry them to the safety of higher ground. The wound in her side tortured her.

At a public park which was near, there were some small boats. In one of these she found refuge with her babies; then exhaustion and loss of blood overcame her, she lost consciousness. The rising waters caught up the little boat and set it adrift.

Next morning, a group of men, huddled on a newly-formed shore, saw the boat. One of them, Tom Aldworth, an acquitted murderer, swam out to it.

Claire Arlington stood on the edge of the little island where the waters had tossed her a few weeks ago. Then, the land on which she climbed had seemed a God-given blessing; she loathed it, as that which itself might seem less bitter. She had lost her husband and baby in the flood; she was free.

She looked across the endless expanse of water. Far to the northeast there seemed to be a trace of land. If she could only be sure! She was a strong swimmer; once she had almost crossed the Dover straits.

She recalled how she had landed on the island, how she had found the three cows whose milk had sustained her. She had been clothed only in a bathing dress, and had set out to explore the island for further clothing and shelter.

Now go on with the story.

Climbing clear of the grassy hollow in which the cows had found their safety, she had reached an undulating space of land about half a mile broad, and beyond that a depression, in the center of which was the ruin of a farmhouse. The hollow of this depression in which the house stood was actually below the new sea-level, but the ground rose again on the further side. What had been a lofty upland had become an island of an area of a square mile or two only, but, on the southern side, there was another space of land of about equal extent, divided by an arm of water which receded at low tide so that it was possible to cross it with little difficulty. This further island had been swept over by the floods, and was bare of any life, though it now stood some feet above the water.

Of this she learnt later. What she first saw was that two men were standing by the ruined house, and so, thinking little of her spare attire in her eagerness to meet with living creatures of her own kind, she had hurried down the slope, while they crossed the more level space beneath her. And with those men she had lived for the past days in the ruined house—and how she loathed them!

They had been days of urgent toil, but without privation or any real discomfort. She thought of the tales she had read of people marooned on desert islands and of their quarrels, and of the love that always followed. But the men in those tales were types rather than individuals, and these were Jephson and Norwood. She noticed that she always thought of Jephson first.

Neither of them was a native of the district. Jephson was a fisherman by trade. He had been the foreman employed on the job of repairing the dilapidated farmhouse in which they were now living. He was a native of Birmingham. He had preferred to live on the premises, while his men lodged in the village. That had saved his life, though the room in which he had slept on the first night had fallen in, and he had been cut and bruised. The lobe of his left ear had been almost severed, and for lack of the aid of anyone with skill to stitch it, it would always hang loose.

He was a man of medium height, very broadly made, and with a heavy, resolute step. His arms were long and very hairy, the hands coarse and scabrous. He had a tuft of straw-colored beard, and a stiff, unshining hair that was broken. His teeth were decayed and wroth. His eyes showed a skinny fringe of yellow around a natural tansure, were small, deep-set, and in his voice was deep, and with a tone of deliberation. Then intense acquisitive lost a wife and some children, but he was more concerned as to the fate of a sum of 300 pounds that he had deposited in the Municipal bank of his native town. He was not of a type of mind that could easily realize that money had no intrinsic value.

It was probably a penurious habit arising from this feature of his character which had led him to live on the job rather than lodge in the village near.

It was clear to him that the house was his, as he had been on the spot when the floods came, and that Norwood and Claire could live there by permission only. His money was gone, but "Pindin's is keepin' now" was the first law he announced for the regulation of his dominion.

Certainly he knew best how to deal with it, and under his expert and energetic hands it soon began to lose the ruined aspect that age and storm had bestowed upon it.

He claimed also a dozen sheep that were running loose on the hill, because "the land goes with the house," and with the same argument he disputed Claire's contention that the cows were hers; a contention first made in jest—for what difference did it make when there was milk for all—but afterwards in earnest when she found that even here the privileges of property might be employed to coerce her.

Norwood was a man cast from a very different mold. His name had been known to her before as a professional cricketer of international reputation. He had been playing at Cheltenham in a three days' match, which began on the Saturday before the storm. A too convivial evening had been followed by a Sunday of heavy sleep, after which he had started out in the evening for a long walk, which experience had taught him was the best way to recover his condition after such an episode. He had been on the hilltop, and about to turn back, calculating that he would reach his hotel in time for three or four hours' sleep before play would be recommenced, when the storm had struck him, and he had lain there for many hours with no more protection than a pile of stones where a wall had fallen. When the force of the wind abated, he had made his way to the farmhouse, and had remained there during the flood and earthquake of the following night, after helping the bruised and bleeding Jephson to disentangle himself from the collapse of the upper room in which he had been sleeping.

He was a man of about 35, tall, handsome in a rather weak and swaggering way, better educated than Jephson, but with far less knowledge or capacity for overcoming the practical aspects of life. He was well-haired, clean-shaven, with the healthy brick-red complexion of the athlete, and showing his vice only in a rather weary appearance of eyes that had still been clear enough to watch a full ball from the bowler's hand until the perfect timing of the stroke should drive it hard and low to the distant boundary.

The sudden oblivion of the world he knew had left him with a sense of stupefaction from which he had only gradually recovered, to inquire what his companions thought had happened to "poor Lil"—a sister, as they understood—with rather maidenly paths.

The condition of the lives of these three derelicts was controlled at first by the configuration of the little bay in which Claire had landed. Narrow at its entrance, it curved to the right hand and widened into a pool, which shallowed as the tide fell, so that the green of the flood grass could be seen clearly through the water. Other things could be seen there also, and other things were left uncovered by the tide on the gently shelving beach of the bay.

For the sea-floor, which had been England, carried an empire's wealth, and the great tides washed it out of the buildings that held it, or broke them down and released it, to add to all that had floated since the flood had risen, and the little bay was like a trap to catch them.

And all these things they toiled to save without ceasing, under Jephson's restless urgency. Nothing would he admit to be too cumbersome or too worthless to be dragged up from the tide level. When that had been done, there was the harder task of carrying all that was of sufficient value over the higher ground and down to the house. Norwood was the more disposed to grumble at this incessant toil, but though Jephson's eager greed was unattractive in its intensity, Claire could see the reason which underlay it, and did her part, and more than that, in the common labor. Even timber might be worth more than they could easily estimate.

Washington (AP)—Up from the shadows to an exalted place in the sun has come the American farm boy and girl, to sit at the right hand of his parents in councils on agricultural improvement.

"In no other phase of our national life," says C. W. Warburton, federal director of agricultural extension, "has the youth of the country experienced a more picturesque and fundamental evolution."

Under the old order, the boy on the farm plowed and pitched hay for his father until he reached the age of maturity. Then he got a horse and buggy. If he had been unusually industrious, his parents might throw in the "back forty," or at least let him have what he raised on it. The girl's chief function was to train for her own household by diligently helping her mother. Neither was of more than elementary economic importance, nor had they the incentive to become more, until they suddenly found themselves facing the problems of citizenship.

Warburton points to the farm club movement and its attainments as evidence of a completely reversed position for rural boys and girls. At the Seventh National Boys' and Girls' 4-H club congress in Chicago, representing a membership of 600,000, two boys and two girls received signal honors, two for excellence of club leadership and two for outstanding club records.

The leadership trophies, offered by H. A. Moses, of Miltonneque, Mass., were won by Edgar Grimes.

Once or twice a conflict of wills had flared into sudden anger, that might die down as quickly, but left a subtle difference of mutual relations behind it.

Rural Club Throws Spotlight on Up and Coming Farm Youths

Emphasis on youthful accomplishment has reversed the position of the American farm boy and girl, says C. W. Warburton (inset), federal director of agricultural extension. If he had been unusually industrious, his parents might throw in the "back forty," or at least let him have what he raised on it. The girl's chief function was to train for her own household by diligently helping her mother. Neither was of more than elementary economic importance, nor had they the incentive to become more, until they suddenly found themselves facing the problems of citizenship.

Warburton points to the farm club movement and its attainments as evidence of a completely reversed position for rural boys and girls. At the Seventh National Boys' and Girls' 4-H club congress in Chicago, representing a membership of 600,000, two boys and two girls received signal honors, two for excellence of club leadership and two for outstanding club records.

The leadership trophies, offered by H. A. Moses, of Miltonneque, Mass., were won by Edgar Grimes.

Once or twice a conflict of wills had flared into sudden anger, that might die down as quickly, but left a subtle difference of mutual relations behind it.

Corn Makes Upgain

But Gains Fail to Stand Selling Wave to Realize Profits

CHICAGO, Dec. 27 (AP)—Corn scored fresh gains in price today, but the gains failed to stand up against a wave of selling to realize profits. In some cases, today's corn market came within 10¢ of equaling the topmost quotations yet this season. Meanwhile, corn receipts in Chicago lacked volume, and rural offerings to arrive were small, but deliveries here on December contracts were much larger, aggregating 720,000 bushels.

Closing quotations on corn were irregular at 10¢ net lower to 10¢ advance. Wheat finished 10¢ to 10¢ up, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 25¢.

Speculators friendly to higher prices for corn showed much activity at the start, but soon discovered that the market was by no means one-sided. For example, a house with export connections became an aggressive seller of December deliveries, although at the same time a buyer of May. Nevertheless, December showed more relative strength than did May, and went to within 5¢ of the distant month as against 7c last week.

Some of today's selling of corn was ascribed to reports of a decrease in the fall pig crop as compared with last year. In this connection, the fact was pointed out that receipts of hogs thus far this year at 29 principal markets have reached a total nearly 6,000,000 larger than for the corresponding period last year, and hog receipts since the first week in November, when new corn began to be fed in substantial quantities, have averaged almost 800,000 a week. Oats were unsettled, duplicating the action of corn. December oats went to a premium over May for the first time this season.

Wheat price declines today were associated a good deal with evidence of selling here for Winnipeg account. Furthermore, bears emphasized that the United States wheat visible supply is the heaviest ever known, 50,000,000 bushels more than last year, and that prices here are above world parity.

Provisions developed firmness as a result of scattered buying, although hog values were mostly 25¢ lower.

Dr. Woods Will Assume Duties at University Jan. 1

Duties as professor of psychiatry and head of the psychopathic hospital at the University of Iowa formally will be assumed Jan. 1 by Dr. Andrew H. Woods, formerly of the Peking Union Medical college of China.

Dr. Woods, whose appointment to the position was announced Aug. 1, is the successor of Dr. Samuel D. Orton, resigned. He returned to the United States earlier in the year after a long period of service in China. A graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. Woods was a teacher and special research worker in Philadelphia prior to his location in Peking.

The new member of the college of medicine faculty was a colleague of Dr. Henry S. Houghton, dean of the college, when Dean Houghton was head of the Peking institution.

Identify the Lifetime pen by this white dot

The seal of approval

A recent survey of leading universities and colleges conclusively showed that in forty-one per cent of them Sheaffer's Lifetime writing tools are first in favor. LIGHTEST TOUCH response, yet a nib fortified to produce easily three carbons of notes, correspondence, confidential matters, gives the Lifetime pen first place wherever pen values are carefully considered. Unconditionally guaranteed for a lifetime, the beauty and economy of these writing twins have easily earned them the seal of approval.
