Lieut. Grow Denies Alleged Intention of Bombing Arequipa

LIMA, Peru, Sept. 9 (AP)—The Arequipa newspaper, "Noticias," today published an interview with Lieut. Com. Harold B. Grow, U. S. naval reserve officer who was head of the Peruvian air service under deposed President Leguia, denying that he intended to bomb the city of Arequipa.

Grow, detained at Arequipa by the military junta headed by Lieut. Col. Sanchez Cerro, said that he was flying to Arequipa to scatter a government proclamation over the rebel troops when he was captured. He said he had one bomb which he intended to use to attract attention of the rebels. He explained that the bomb weighed only 25 pounds and would have been useless in a bombardment.

"I prefer that Peru decide my fate without any foreign pressure," Grow was quoted as saying. "I have asked the diplomatic representative of my country not to intervene because I believe I am not to blame but am the victim of circumstances. I hope justice will prevail. My sincerest wish is to continue developing aviation in Peru as I have done during the last seven years."

The Door of Death

by John Esteven

What has gone before: Celia Ballion, who was known to be unhappily married, is murdered. Circumstantial evidence points to her husband Francis Ballion, as the murderer. When quizzed by Norse, a police official, he denies his guilt, but refuses to reveal his whereabouts on the night of the crime. His brother, Carl, believes him to be innocent, and Norse is inclined to share the belief. Dr. Ames, a friend of the murdered woman's sister, Eleanor Graham, thinks Ballion guilty. Norse delays in making the arrest and, the morning after the murder, he receives a note bearing Ballion's signature in which he admits the crime and says he is committing suicide. Dr. Ames, at Miss Graham's request remains at the Ballion home, Greystone, to care for an old servant, who has become ill. His discovery that Carl Ballion and Miss Graham are engaged, depresses him. Half-heartedly he agrees to aid Norse in a final investigation that the detective is making.

Now go on with the story:

I felt, rather than observed, a change in Carl Ballion's attitude as the three of us drove into town. It was not coolness so much as an alert and critical appraisal, the sort given to those who bring casual acquaintances, are on the point of becoming factors in our intimate concerns. But, when these concerns revolve about a young and attractive woman, there is apt to be more suspicion than benevolence in the scrutiny, and more jealousy than either.

And somehow I had the intuition that Ballion's jealousy could be scathing and relentless, that it was safe to flinch bare-handed the quarry of a lion than give an impression here of intruding. Not that I admired him the less for this—it was merely an aspect of his character and energy; nor above all, could I blame him; but, as I had not the slightest desire to intrude, his possible uneasiness left me embarrassed.

When we had dropped Norse at the police officers, he gave me a suitable veiled warning.

"How long," he asked, "will it take before Anne Roderick can be moved?" And, when I answered doubtfully, he exclaimed: "Poor Eleanor, she's been under a dreadful strain, and Celia's burial today means a new effort. I hope you'll see that she gets away from Greystone as soon as possible."

I replied that I had urged her to leave, that she needed a change of air, and that I would do my best.

"She's been there a year," he went on, "since Celia's condition grew worse. So far, I've been able to take her out a good deal, and she's made some distraction; but now that's impossible. The place will seem a prison to her, and I don't want her to get there, because this is strictly between you and me; we expect to live together there some day."

I congratulated him with all feeling, for if there was ever a man who, by reason of personal charm and attainments, deserved Eleanor Graham, it was he. I think my manner reassured him. He thanked me for staying at Greystone; but hoped I would not be long in becoming convinced.

"Of course, I feel safer in having your there. If I can do anything, let me know. And, at any rate, I'll be out for dinner occasionally."

But the implication, perhaps fanciful on my part, was that he intended to exercise friendly supervision.

He need not, however, have been concerned. Now that, so to speak, the vague allurements of a doubt had passed from my interest in Eleanor.

Day's Trade in Bonds Has Steady Tone

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (AP)—Bonds were steady to firm on an increased turnover today. Scattered liquidation of some of the prime rails cut small fractions from their quoted prices, but funds thus realized seemed to be finding prompt reinvestment elsewhere, especially in issues offering higher yields.

Argentine firmers. The Republic 6's of 1958, series B, gained more than a point on a large turnover, while the October 6's of 1959 rallied 2 points. Buenos Aires bonds were likewise taken at considerably higher levels.

Stock warrant and convertible bonds enjoyed a fairly good market. American International 5's Remington Rand 5's with warrants, Texas Corporation 5's and Warner Brothers Pictures 6's were among the firm spots. Rails carrying stock features sagged, for there was little vitality in the railroad shares on the stock exchange. Reading Coal and Iron 6's gained a point and 1/2 in general. Small declines in Atchafalpa 6's, Baltimore and Ohio 5's, Chesapeake and Ohio 4's, Union Pacific First 4's and Western Maryland 4's, as well as a drop of nearly a point in Frisco 4's, suggested that buyers were willing to give some of the recent active rails a rest.

On the other hand, Chicago Great Western 4's, the St. Paul General 4's and 5's, Great Northern 7's, Missouri Pacific General 4's, Northern Pacific 6's and Northern Central 4's were active on a rising price scale. Kansas City Southern 5's made a new high.

Utilities and industrials were firm. Armour Real Estate 4 1/2's, Bush Terminal 5's, International Cement 6's, U. S. Rubber 5's, Sinclair Oil 6's, United Biscuit 6's, Colorado Fuel and Iron 5's, American Ice 6's and Postal Telegraph 7's averaged more than half a point higher.

Dealings in listed United States governments were the smallest in some time and prices held steady.

KNOW YOUR IOWA CITY

Perry Won Battle of Lake Erie 117 Years Ago Today, Reports James O'Hanlon

Exactly 117 years ago today one of the big moments in United States history came to an American "fleet" on Lake Erie.

Admiral Oliver Hazard Perry's flagship, The Lawrence—named for "Don't give up the ship" Lawrence—was sinking. With a crew of survivors Perry got into an open boat and braved British fire in a dash for a new flagship, so that when the battle was over he could send a message to President James Madison that "We have met the enemy and they are ours."

Joining the memory of Iowa City newspaper readers on the fact was the mission of James O'Hanlon yesterday. This oldest among Johnson county Sons of Veterans came, saw, and conquered.

Mr. O'Hanlon did not know he was to be the subject for a feature article when he came last week or when he returned yesterday. He was more interested in describing how puny The Lawrence looked at Erie, Pa., where it was restored after a reported stay of 40 years under the currents and cross currents of Lake Erie—seemingly as well preserved as ever.

Drummer Boy in '65

You see, Mr. O'Hanlon was born along the shore of Lake Erie, in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania. There, as a lad 11 years old he woke to an interest in the nation's affairs as a newspaper carrier boy when the Civil war broke out. His father, two uncles, and three cousins went to war.

Only 15 when the war ended, James O'Hanlon was too young to go off to battle, but he did get to serve as drummer boy for the 53rd Pennsylvania at Camp Reel, East Erie.

His father brought the family to Iowa City in 1867, continuing his work as railroad contractor, building bridges in this vicinity—including that over Iowa river at Iowa avenue prior to the present concrete structure.

Everything was of stone then, the contractor's son remembers, cement being used only for mortar.

Pick and Shovel Methods

And the miracle of railroad construction impresses him. Virtually all the nation's railway mileage was built, he says, with the only tools shovels, picks, crowbars and wheelbarrows.

It was as a carrier boy for the Buffalo Express that 12 year old James O'Hanlon met President Abraham Lincoln getting to shake hands as he presented the chief executive with a paper.

That reminds him of the Lincoln-Douglas debate at Freeport, Ill., which his father heard and told about. Notables were seated on a platform before a large audience.

A wave of uneasiness stirred the crowd. "Honest Abe" was late, his train having been delayed. Presently the future president arrived, passing before Stephen A. Douglas enroute to his seat on the platform.

That dark, curly headed, stocky "little giant" remarked in a stage whisper "How long, O Lord, how long!"—punning on the opponent's length of height and tardiness.

Undisturbed, Lincoln informed his listeners that "I have come here to do something I don't like to do, but which I must—stone Stephen."

Mr. O'Hanlon chuckles in recollection of the audience's mirth at Lincoln's punning retort.

That North, South Spat

Another item concerning the Lincoln administration was that there were four living ex-presidents—the most alive at any one time in the nation's history—all credited by gossip with being southern sympathizers.

Southerner John Tyler had commanded troops in the Mexican war, an enterprise partly in behalf of slave territory expansion. James Buchanan, Lincoln's predecessor, was considered lukewarm in his official attitude toward a rebellious south. Millard Fillmore and Franklin Pierce likewise were regarded as anti-northern sympathizers.

Had Lincoln lived following the war, Mr. O'Hanlon is sure he would have tried to colonize the Negroes in some such place as Liberia, Africa.

Andrew Johnson O. K.

His successor, Andrew Johnson of Tennessee, was a democrat put on the ticket to hold border state votes—patriotic, but stubborn. He wanted to put through reconstruction as cheaply and quickly as possible, in spite of speculators and exploiters.

"Historians and writers will tell us today that Johnson was right," remarks Mr. O'Hanlon of this president who faced impeachment by congress.

The former drummer boy became of age soon after this. Ulysses S. Grant was elected president in 1868. Mr. O'Hanlon believes it was at the next election that Jefferson Davis, one-time president of the southern confederacy, was elected to the senate from Mississippi but rejected by that body because he had failed to take the oath of allegiance.

Mr. O'Hanlon voted on his twenty-first birthday, in October 1871. At that time Maine was not the only state holding its election earlier than the customary November time.

Voted Against Grant

Eligible to cast his first vote in a national election in 1872, Mr. O'Hanlon threw his ballot democratic, for Horace Greely of the New York Tribune. But southern Negroes who also obtained the franchise that year more than balanced his vote with theirs for General Grant, and Greely lost.

A decade later came the first Australian ballot in Iowa—for a prohibition referendum. Though the state voted dry, a law of the state legislature in 1885—the mulct or high license statute—reversed the situation, and Iowa as a whole did not become dry officially until 1916, Mr. O'Hanlon reports.

There were dry counties and wet counties in the meantime, however. Washington county was dry. Muscatine, though a river town went dry

Washington, Lincoln, Wilson

Which brings to mind the fact that Woodrow Wilson tried to suppress drinking as a war measure, much as Abraham Lincoln had issued the Emancipation proclamation against slavery. Those two men and George Washington have been the nation's greatest presidents, all serving during major wars, the two more recent ones elected in spite of rather than because of best political intentions when the rival party split.

But one of the best things for the north in the Civil war was a defeat at the outset, claims Mr. O'Hanlon—the battle of Bull Run. Stung into action and awakened to weaknesses, federal forces were able to come back. How they came back this 80 year old man who was once a drummer boy can tell, chapter and verse, about all battles of consequence in the Civil war.

Stock Market Values Seek Higher Level

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (AP)—Bullish activity in the merchandising and utility shares piloted the stock market to higher levels today, but the prominent industrials were spotty, the rails dull and the oils irregular.

The general trend of prices was upward with the exception of a mid-afternoon interval when selling, independent steels and the oil shares threatened the day's gains in the stronger groups. But recovery from this decline was prompt and the last hour was the busiest period. Total sales fell somewhat short of 2,000,000 shares.

The weekly federal reserve member bank statement seemed to meet with the approval of the bull clan. It showed a gain of $30,000,000 in the so-called commercial loan item.

The market's eager search for stocks that will be the first to profit by seasonal improvement sent traders to the merchandising issues. Woolworth was a favorite, rallying more than 2 points on a large turnover.

The tobacco group was active and strong. American tobacco old shares were bid up 4 points while Liggett and Myers rallied 3 and "B" stock 2. Foods, particularly Canada Dry, National Biscuits, Loose-Wiles and General Foods, received some attention.

Uneasiness over the crude oil curtailment program in Oklahoma, where legal action has been taken to prevent enforcement of the corporation commission's production order against one company, affected the oils. Standard of New Jersey dipped a point and other members of the Standard group reacted fractionally. Houston, primarily a natural gas issue, advanced a point.

General Electric, Radio, Westinghouse Electric and Eastman Kodak moved quietly, making nominal gains. General Motors lost its aggressiveness and yielded half a point on the day. Auburn Auto slipped back in profit taking, while Pierce Arrow preferred went to a new low on a five point break.

A dozen or so of the utilities rallied one to three points. Postal Telegraph preferred was one of the few soft spots in the group, making a new low at 85.

Call money held at 2 1/2 per cent, although some loans were made in the outside market at 2 per cent, apparently forecasting an official return to that level in a few days.

A marked improvement in Latin American rates featured the foreign exchanges. The Spanish peseta was strong.

Spot corn receipts were estimated at 105 cars. The trading basis was largely unchanged on both the choice and less desirable offerings. Sales also were unchanged. Shipping sales were only 31,000 bushels and bookings to arrive 9,000 bushels.

Cash oats receipts estimated at 47 cars, met with fair demand. Spot oats are now being quoted compared with December instead of September. The trading basis was unchanged and with December on the downgrade, spot sales were 3-4c lower. Shipping sales totaled 95,000 bushels.

A recent survey revealed 244 non-cultivated plants in Texas that are susceptible to cotton root rot.
