Discovery of Bodies, Plane Ends Search

Transport Mail Plane Crashes in West on Plateau

BURBANK, Calif., Nov. 19 (AP)—The three passengers of the Pacific transport mail plane were found dead today in the Tehachapi mountain foothills, where the plane had crashed on a sloping plateau. Discovery of the bodies ended a 43-hour search by scores of planes. The wreckage had not burned. The plane piloted by F. A. Donaldson, former Iowan, and carrying Miss Jean Markow, 18, of Los Angeles, and George Rogers, a mechanic, left United airport here Monday midnight and became lost in fog, snow, and gales over Tejon, 80 miles north. The end of the ill fated flight came approximately half way between Tejon and Antelope Valley emergency airports, the former in the Tehachapis and the latter in the flat at the edge of the Mojave desert.

Pilot Leaves Milford for Coast Years Ago

MILFORD, Iowa, Nov. 19 (AP)—Flavius A. Donaldson, mail plane pilot reported lost in California mountains with two passengers, formerly lived here. During the World war he was a lieutenant in the aviation corps and went to the Pacific coast four years ago. The airport here is named for Donaldson and his brother, Grant, also a mail plane pilot. Small Town Dumfounded by Twister

200 Buildings Topped on Residents in Heavy Rain

OKLAHOMA CITY, Nov. 19 (AP)—A tornado cut a swath of death and destruction today through the little church colony of Bethany, seven miles west of here. Seventeen persons were killed. At least 100 persons were injured and more than 200 buildings were destroyed. Several persons were injured so critically that they first were included in the death list. Striking during a heavy rain storm, the tornado leveled a 288 yard wide path through the eastern edge of the town, burying many persons in the splintered wreckage of their homes.

Ambulance Rushed There

All ambulances in Oklahoma City were rushed to the scene and the dead and injured were brought to city morgues and hospitals. Red Cross and Salvation Army workers rendered first aid. Five companies of Oklahoma National Guardsmen went into the area after the storm to protect the scattered valuables from vandals. Dropping first a few miles south of Bethany, the twisting funnel of death wrecked the Camel Creek school house, killing four pupils and injuring the teachers and 10 other children.

Wind Swept North

The tornado whipped on north, through the eastern side of Bethany, state headquarters of the Nazarene church and home of Bethany Bible college, a denominational school. Like a gigantic scythe, the storm cut a sharply defined swath through a residential section, reducing frame houses to splinters and toppling brick buildings like toy block houses. Most of those killed were here.

Football Men Rescuers

The first organized unit to attack the wreckage was the football team of the nearby Putnam consolidated school. Two members of the group alone carried 8 dead from the wreckage homes. Yates Hoover, an ambulance driver, found the body of his father where their home once stood. Unable to find his mother, he removed his father to the morgue and then rushed back in search of her.

When Mrs. W. L. Burton saw the storm approaching, she caught her baby in her arms and sheltered it as the house collapsed. Her husband found her, shivering in the rain, the child still clutched in protection. The baby escaped with minor scratches, but Mrs. Burton was badly lacerated.

The Quadrangle team, captained by Norman Stefkun, A1 of Rolfe, reported the highest amount, with $96 pledged. Individual honors went to Charles Luthe, A3 of Des Moines, who turned in $27. Close to his record was one of $25 made by Lucy Marsh, A1 of Keokuk.

Fire Causes $5,000 Injury to Buildings

Fire destroying property estimated at $5,000 broke out at the farm of Mr. and Mrs. William Wormer six miles south of Iowa City on the sand road. The fire, discovered at 7 p.m., burned the house and several out buildings. The fire, which raged for two hours, was discovered by Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Sutton, daughter, Dorothy, and Salome Foote who turned in the alarm and aided in fighting the blaze. Miss Sutton stayed in the house, telephoning neighbors for aid. A bucket brigade was organized and saved the barn. A daughter, 18 years, an uncle, and the hired man were living in the house at the time of the fire. Mr. and Mrs. Wormer are in Chicago, Ill. The loss was covered by insurance.

MONEY FOR NOTHING—GAL I (What Has Happened Before) John Carroll, who is in love with Patricia Wynne, sees a menace to his hopes in the feud between his uncle and her father. (Now Go On With the Story) It did not occur to John to question the accuracy of the other's information, nor to be surprised at its minuteness of detail. Mr. Bywater, who was aware, has a daughter in the postoffice. "Tomorrow!" he gasped. "Yes, sir, Tomorrow." "Give me my chance," said John. He yearned to be off. He wanted to ponder over this wonderful news. "No doubt," said Mr. Bywater. "Give me my chance," said John. Chas. Bywater, happening to catch his eye, did so. To reach Rudge Hall from the door of Chas. Bywater's shop, you go up the High street, turn sharp to the left down River Lane, cross the stone bridge that spans the slow flowing Skirne as it potters past on its way to join the Severn, carry on along the road till you come to the gates of Colone Wynne's nice little house, and then climb a stile and take to the fields. And presently you are in the park and can see through the trees and tall chimneys and red walls of the ancient home of the Carnwoods. The scene, when they are not touching off dynamite there under the noses of retired military officers, is one that speaks of peace. For John it had always held a peculiar magic. In the 14 years since the Wynvers had first come to settle in Rudge, Pat had contrived, so far as he was concerned, to impress her personality ineffaceably on the landscape. Almost every inch of it was in some way associated with her. Stumps on which she had sat and swung her brown-stockinged legs; trees beneath which she had taken shelter with him from summer storms; gates on which she had climbed, fields across which she had raced, and thorny bushes into which she had urged him to penetrate in search of birds' eggs—they met his eye on every side. The very air seemed to be alive with her laughter. And not even the recollection that she was coming home... John sat up suddenly. He was a slow thinker, and only now did it occur to him just what the position of affairs would be when she did come home. With this infernal feud going on between Uncle Lester and the old Colonel, she would probably look on him as in the enemy's camp and refuse to see or speak to him. The thought chilled him to the marrow. Something, he felt, must be done, and swiftly. And, with a flash of inspiration of a kind that rarely came to him, he saw what that something was. He must go up to London this afternoon, tell her the facts, and throw himself on her clemency. If he could convince her that he was wholeheartedly pro-Colonel and regarded Uncle Lester as the logical successor to Dr. Crippen and the Brides-in-the-Bath murderer, things might straighten themselves. Once the brain gets working, there is no knowing where it will stop. The very next instant there had come to John Carroll a thought so new and breathtaking that he uttered an audible gasp. Why shouldn't he ask Pat to marry him? John sat tingling from head to foot. The scales seemed to have fallen from his eyes, and he saw clearly where he might quite conceivably have been making a grave blunder all these years. Deeply as he had always loved Pat, he had never—now he came to think of it—told her so. And, in this sort of situation, the spoken word is quite apt to make all the difference. Perhaps that was why she laughed at him so frequently—because she was entertained by the spectacle of a man, obviously in love with her, re-creating year after year from making any verbal comment on the state of his emotions. Resolution poured over John in a strengthening flood. He looked at his watch. It was nearly three. If he got the two-seater and started at once, he could be in London by seven, in nice time to take her to dinner somewhere. He hurried down the stairs and out into the stable-yard. "Shove that car out of the way, Bolt," said John eluding Emily, who, wet to the last hair, was endeavoring to climb up him. "I want to get the two-seater."

Ballot Check Shows Shift in Standings

Several changes were apparent in the Hawkeye beauty contest after a ballot count last night. Twenty girls of the 35 in competition for the title of Iowa's most beautiful were named in the order of their standing to date. In order, the others are: Ruth Mallett, A1 of Memphis, Tenn.; Frances Kauffman, A4 of State Center; Evelyn Hanson, A4 of Callender; LaVaun Heyman, A2 of Moville. Christine Eubank, A4 of Cullison, Kan.; Gretchen Pulley, A3 of Ma-Moines; Myrl Whalley, A1 of Witchita; Mary Hinkle, A4 of Des Moines; Myrl Whalley, A1 of Iowa City; Emily Herman, A2 of Peoria, Ill.; Pauline Wheeler, C3 of Burlington; Charlotte Bubb, A1 of Sioux Falls, S. D. Kathryn Stromsten, A1 of Campdown; Sara Markovitz, A1 of Iowa City; Florence Lawton, A4 of Alden; Evelyn Winkler, N4 of Monona; Ruth Wood, A4 of Davenport; Carolyn Fisher, A2 of Boston, Mass.; and Helen Wetrich, A1 of Iowa City.

At Illinois it's

ALONG Green Street, where campus leaders stroll... in the great slate-roofed fraternity houses of Champaign... there is one pipe tobacco which always rolls up the biggest vote. At Illinois it's Edgeworth, every time.

A pipe—Edgeworth. That is the smoking combination which has won the college man. Harvard, Cornell, Michigan, Stanford, Dartmouth—all agree with Illinois. Natural merit has made Edgeworth the favorite tobacco in America's leading colleges and universities.

College men everywhere respond to the appeal of pipes—packed with cool, slow-burning Edgeworth. Be guided by their verdict: try Edgeworth yourself. Find it at your nearest tobacco shop—15¢ the tin. Or, for generous free sample, address: Larus & Bro. Co., 105 S. 22d St., Richmond, Va.

Bobby Jones, Sportsman

ROBERT Tyre Jones, holder of all American and British amateur golf titles, has announced his retirement from further competition, giving among his reasons the demands of his law practice and the signing of a contract with Warner Brothers for the making of a series of 12 educational films.

Jones has always been very careful to do nothing that would in any way endanger his amateur standing. A few years ago, enthusiastic golf fans in his home town, Atlanta, Georgia, wanted to present him with a house costing several thousand dollars. Bobby refused the gift on the ground that it would violate the spirit of the amateur code.

His contract with Warner Brothers was not necessarily an infraction of the rules but he preferred that there be not the slightest question of his position as an amateur. Contenders in other lines of amateur sport could do no worse than follow the example of this "champion of champions." Not that there is anything wrong with honest professionalism; that has nothing to do with it, but rather that persons participating as amateurs should confine themselves strictly to the limits imposed by their non-professional standing as long as they choose to remain as such.

Were this true, much easier would be the lot of various athletic coaches and faculty committees, and the tendency would be towards cleaner and more sportsmanlike sports.

Student Automobiles

THE QUESTION of automobiles at colleges and universities has long been a question which has troubled students as well as faculty members.

Drastic methods have been taken in some institutions. Illinois for example, passed a law several years ago depriving the students of their cars. This action was taken by the university as a means of preventing accidents and increasing grades.

Whether or not the students of Illinois have profited by the ban on cars is not known. Each year approximately 700 permits are granted automobile owners. As long as permits are so easily obtained it seems that the no car policy does little or no good.

At the University of Iowa this fall there has been much talk about the no car system, following two fatal accidents. Dean Robert E. Rienow has spiked the rumor with the statement that such a policy could not be strictly enforced. He believes that some day students will be flying to classes in airplanes and that this university must keep up with the procession.

"Learn how to drive more expertly," was the sage advice of the dean. "We are living in an age of invention and we must keep up with the times and not attempt to retard progress."

To An Editorial Writer

SPEECHES have been made about the making of speeches. Movies have been filmed about the filming of movies. Stories have been told about the telling of stories. Why not write an editorial about the writing of editorials?

Ambitious young persons walk the streets daily, study the newspapers, talk with learned men, always searching for material with which to fill these columns. If the student is an observing soul a topic quickly arrives, sometimes accompanied by inspirations. More often the topic arrives alone.

The ambitious young person seats himself before a blank sheet of paper, absently chewing the end of a pencil, deep in thought. He attempts a beginning, reads his work, scratches it out, rewrites it. For several minutes he puzzles over the wording of his next phrase, drawing old designs on the margins of the paper.

Suddenly a fleeting moment of inspiration comes to him. Ideas follow one another rapidly. He jots down key words, and begins to write hurriedly, filling the page. Then blankness surrounds him once more—how can the masterpiece be ended?

He lights a cigaret, rises to sharpen his pencil, rushes back to finish the editorial and slumps back in his chair with a sigh of satisfaction as he realizes the work is done.

Maybe it is good, maybe not, but to its author it is a precious thing, a brain child. Pity the poor editorial writer. His life is a hard one. But work has its compensation when the morning paper comes off the press, giving to the world the finished product of an ambitious soul.

Something in Common?

TO A PERSON who has watched cattle being driven from freight cars into the Chicago stock yards no doubt the sight is somewhat impressive. The great surging mass crowding and shuddering through the narrow runway cannot help but raise the thought of pity for the massive beasts, equipped with brawn and strength, but sadly lacking in intelligence.

The same person might view a partial parallel of the scene if he were to stand on the steps of Old Capitol and watch the north door of the L. A. building at the hour of class suspension.

Of course the intelligence of the actors in the two scenes is incomparable, although obviously they have something in common.

Public Health Service

FROM the day of the medicine show to the era of profound medical knowledge is a short period of time but an advancement not to be measured in years. The science of medicine has broadened in an attempt to include in its ministering all the strata of society, and is no longer restricted to those able to pay high fees.

Public health service is organized for this welfare of all classes. Those who can pay for service are expected to do so, and if full price cannot be paid, a smaller sum is acceptable. Persons entirely dependent upon the community in which they live are treated free.

Communities have organized such service but a great many are independent projects, willing to hold responsibility until the community is able to step in and take over the burden.

Dr. A. J. McLaughlin, medical director of the United States public health service, has commended the splendid work being done by the University of Iowa, Iowa State college at Ames, and Iowa State Teacher's college at Cedar Falls, in this field.

Here, school children are given regular physical examinations and also are examined in special fields such as ears, eyes, and throat. Undernourished children drink milk during each morning, health lecturers are a part of the school curriculum, corrective exercises are given to the abnormal, and physical training to all others.

General supervision in this field is relaxed somewhat in high school and college, but a school doctor is always available for conference and personal advice.

Dr. McLaughlin only deplors the circumstances which limit the far reaching possibilities of these unofficial health agencies; namely, inadequate appropriations and lack of proper organization.

Through such agencies, new fields are explored which the public health department has neither the time nor money to tackle. Such an enterprise is above monetary value. It is a calculation in lives and happiness. Its existence is no longer a question of usefulness. It is of advancement to the highest plane of its possibilities when human suffering need no longer go on unnecessarily.

That state appropriations in this field are meager must result from ignorance of its benefits. Will the citizen of Iowa let the progress of his state lag in this respect?

Wet or Dry?

Editor's note: This is the fourth of a series of editorials commenting on the status of prohibition as brought into the national spotlight through November's election. These expressions of opinion will, of course, vary from the editorial policy of the paper.

TWO separate temperance organizations look back separately on the recent elections and analyze them similarly but as offering little comfort to prohibition's opponents. F. Scott McBride, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon league, in a survey for members of his organization, described as "vain" and "wet" hopes that the Democratic landslide is indicative of a corresponding landslide of sentiment against prohibition.

Since the election Nov. 4 nearly all loud speakers of the political realms have shifted their endeavors to one major issue—prohibition or the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Disregarding the fact that the general unrest from the business depression, combined with various other grievances, may have aided in causing the Democratic victory, political leaders have shelved all arguments in favor of the prohibition question, which they term the universal problem facing the American nation today.

Wet Democrats herald the victory as a national agitation against prohibition—dry Republicans deny this. Vice President Charles H. Curtis in a statement following election returns termed the Democratic victory during an off-year election as a good thing for the Republican party. The vice president believes that it will awaken the party to the situation before the next presidential campaign, stimulating the party to greater activity and arousing it from the laxity so often prevalent following a previous election landslide.

Whatever the cause of the late Democratic victory or the sentiment among Republican leaders as to laxity among their ranks, the prohibition question has as a result become a major issue and will, regardless of depressions and other national problems, hold that rank prior to and through the election in 1932.

But making it a major issue should not be the proper elevation of the problem. It is more reason that there should develop a more constructive policy by both parties, not only the loud speaking factional differences of opinion. Republicans have the duty of improving the present situation of "procrastinating, indecisive, flabby" prohibition enforcement—the Democrats offering a plan of replacement, not just a repeal resulting in near chaos through further experiment.

Course Books

Attention of liberal arts and commerce students is asked to the following quotation from the first inside page of the student's course book: "If the course book at this registration time does not yet include the record of your latest semester or term, deposit it, not later than the middle of the semester or term for which you register, in the registrar's office in a self-addressed stamped envelope, with your final study list for that season copied in it, as indicated above."

Sometimes students submit their course books "WITH" rather than "IN" an addressed, stamped envelope which is not large enough to accommodate the course book. In no such case will the registrar's office return the course book by mail, though the student may obtain it by calling at the office after grades and credits have been recorded. A similar procedure will be adopted when the course book is left at the office unaccompanied by an addressed, stamped envelope. H. C. DORCAS, registrar.

EXPLANATION OF YESTERDAY'S CARTOON

A prisoner gained 40 pounds in the death house: The murderer who gained 40 pounds awaiting execution, pending his confirmation of the sentence, was Mombe, of Epinal, who was convicted of murdering his wife and infant. He was executed in 1869. The bizarre physical effect on him of the Death House was related in a paper read before the eighth International Congress of Penitentiaries in Paris, 1910, by Dr. Douglas Clayborne.

The Iron Pillar: The Iron Pillar, which I sketched in the Mosque of Kutubul Islam, Delhi, is one of the most curious antiquities in India. It is a solid shaft of wrought iron, more than 16 inches in diameter, and 23 feet 8 inches in length. According to tradition it was Angang Pal, the founder of the Tomar dynasty, who erected the pillar in Delhi, after its removal from Bihar in the ancient country of Makadha, Gupta Empire. Its inscriptions date back to 400 A. D. It has been exposed to the elements since that date without rusting, due to the pure content of the iron. Analysis of its material shows that it is 99.72 per cent pure iron.

St. Mary's Opens Court Season With Lopsided Victory Over Riverside Five

Sueppelmen Look Well in Initial Game

Veteran Gaulocher and Consamus Lead in Scoring

Displaying remarkable early season form, St. Mary's Ramblers opened their basketball season with a 27 to 13 victory over Riverside on the Iowa City high court last night. A defense which forced their opponents to be content with long shots, and an offense with which they sifted through for many setups enabled the locals to lead from the start. While inexperienced, the Ramblers showed power and promise to carry on in a manner worthy of their predecessors.

Ramblers Show Form
The veteran Gaulocher and the giant Consamus proved the keys of St. Mary's attack, sinking a total of eight field goals and one charity toss. Morrison played a nice defensive game, while the rest of the Ramblers showed form on the court. For Riverside Dautermont stood out. He caged four long shots from the floor, and with Swift provided most of Riverside's defensive strength.

The Ramblers got away to an early lead on short shots by Gaulocher, and were ahead 10 to 2 at the end of the first quarter. Riverside did not get a shot from within the foul line in this period. Dautermont scoring their only points on a difficult shot from center. Before the half the Riverside ace had almost evened up matters with two more long ones, making the score at the rest period 15 to 3.

Consamus Goes Wild
In the second half Riverside played better basketball, getting through for numerous short shots but failing to make them. For the Ramblers when Gaulocher left the game Consamus got hot, and tipped in three short shots in succession placing his team far in the lead.

At the end of the third quarter the score was 21 to 11 in favor of St. Mary's. Coach Sueppel substituted freely in the last period and the seconds held the visitors safely through the remainder of the contest.

Hanley Asks 'Cats for Birthday Victory

EVANSTON, Ill., Nov. 19 (AP)—Coach Dick Hanley of Northwestern university football fame was 35 years old today and, as per his usual custom, he asked his Wildcats to give him a victory over Notre Dame Saturday for a birthday present. Until last fall, Coach Hanley's football teams at Haskell and Northwestern annually came through with a victory during their coach's birthday week. Notre Dame, Saturday's rival, ended the party last fall by whipping the Wildcats 26 to 6. "We'll give Coach Hanley a double birthday party Saturday by beating Notre Dame," one of the Wildcats promised.

Jack Skein Coaches Volleyball Candidates

Eight candidates for the American Legion volleyball team are working out every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, under the supervision of Jack Skein. The team, which will spend the season meeting clubs of the surrounding cities is to be composed of members of the American Legion gymnasium classes. All members of these classes can compete for places on the team.

VINTON (AP)—The oldest man in Benton county, Paul Cantwell, 104, is dead. He came to America from Ireland and has lived on the same farm near Van Horne for 83 years.

QUAD SIDELINES

By "MEL"
Now that the Quadrangle fall minor sports are in the past tense, basketball looms on the horizon. According to Fred Beebe, director of athletics, there will be a meeting of the general athletic committee Tuesday, Nov. 25, at which time, schedules and practice sessions will be arranged.

Preparations for the court games will begin next week, and the opening tussle will probably be played early in December. As in last year's tournament, the four sections will be represented by two teams, heavyweight and lightweight. Last year competition in the heavyweight division was so keen that the regular schedule closed with three teams sharing the honors, and a playoff was necessary before the champion, Section B, was determined.

In the lightweight division, Section G upset all their opponents and won the championship of their division, but lost to the B heavies in the fight for dormitory championship.

Howard Wickey will captain the Iowans in the meet. Teaming with Wickey will be Tom Kelly, Stuart Skowbo, Emil Trott, and Harold Gunderson, with another thin clad to be chosen.

In the near future under the direction of Aaron Kippes, Chelsea, Mass., trick step artist. Three bi-weekly classes are planned, two for beginners and the other for those who took the course last year. Specific dates for the opening have not been set as yet.

Hill and Dale Men Take Conditioner for Annual Big Ten Run

Intensified speed work over a two-mile stretch on the turf of the Finkbine course served to boost the stamina of the hill topping Hawks, yesterday, in another mid week conditioner.

Coach George T. Bresnahan's six man harrier team will again carry Iowa's hopes for a first bracket placement in the annual conference meet, scheduled for this Saturday at the University of Illinois.

Clinging to a 500 percentage of wins and losses, the Old Gold pacers still have before them the last and greatest opportunity of showing their amassed strength. This Big Ten week end event will bring to a climax the 1930 cross country season.

Howard Wickey will captain the Iowans in the meet. Teaming with Wickey will be Tom Kelly, Stuart Skowbo, Emil Trott, and Harold Gunderson, with another thin clad to be chosen.

Williams Teaches Cagers New Plays

Coach Rollie Williams is devoting most of the practice period to showing his varsity squad of 20 basketball men the plays to be used this coming season.

Candidates are getting back in shape after a spring and summer of leisure and were finding the basket better than at any time this season in last night's practice. Intensive scrimmages will start next week after all men with the exception of football players, have reported to the coach. Football men, who are candidates for the varsity squad, will not be permitted to practice until a week after the final football game, Saturday.

Pro Grid Teams Plan Foreign Trip

CHICAGO, Nov. 19 (AP)—The Green Bay Packers and the Chicago Cardinals, members of the National Professional Football league, are planning a European exhibition tour after the close of the current league season. Plans call for exhibitions in Paris, London and other cities.

Dr. David Jones, owner of the Cardinals, was the originator of the plan and invited the Packers, champions of the league, to furnish opposition. The Packers gladly accepted. If the teams go through with their plans it will be the first foreign invasion of American professional football teams.

Varsity Rips Up Frosh as Willer Stars

Jensvold Twins Adorn Bench; Tompkins Still Absent

Evidence of Iowa's respect for the heavy Cornhusker line cropped out last night when Coach Burton A. Ingwersen ran the varsity in a long hard scrimmage against a picked freshman eleven.

With Lloyd and Leo Jensvold still under handicap of injuries, Coach Ingwersen took no chances on additional bruising to his backfield twins, but kept them on the sidelines throughout the session.

Backs Rip Yearlings
A starting backfield of Oliver Sanden, captain for the game, Bud Willer, flashy red headed speedster, Randall Hickman, hard charging half, and Jerry Kriz, former fullback, recently revamped into a blocking half, ripped through the rhines almost at will. Willer and Hickman got away for most of the varsity's long gains.

Practically the entire squad got into the fracas. The team was clicking so well that the yearlings had little better success stopping the efforts of the reserves than those of the regulars.

Freshman Can't Gain
When the freshman took the ball to display Nebraska plays to the varsity they met with little success. The fighting Hawkeyes forwards broke through consistently to break up the demonstration, while the backs knocked down the yearling attack.

Nelson Tompkins, regular guard, was stuck out of scrimmage with a cracked rib, and probably will not see action Saturday. Ed Hantelmann will probably replace him in the starting lineup.

Yesterday's practice was the last hard scrimmage of the year. Ingwersen will take no further chances on injuries to his already battered squad.

U. Hi Takes Last Workout for Marengo

Following the taking of photographs of the entire squad and individual pictures of the star men, the University high gridders held their last practice of the season yesterday afternoon before the homecoming game with Marengo tomorrow.

Coach E. R. Handy gave final instructions to the team and explained the strength and weaknesses of its opponent before sending the men into a light scrimmage which stressed special practice. Wylack crashed through the line for several long gains on the scrubs and Moore went around the ends for consistent yardage. The entire squad is functioning as a unit and are all keyed for tomorrow's tilt.

A large pile of old boxes and packing cases behind the school house gave promise of a bonfire and pep meeting last night.

Interest in Handball Tournament Slumps

Harold Kyvig, director of American Legion athletics, said last night that interest in the city championship handball tournament has slumped considerably. Only 15 men have registered to date. This showing is much less than pre-season inquiries warranted.

The tourney will be open to all men entered in the regular club classes, and Mr. Kyvig requests that all men planning to enter get in touch with him in the near future.

Sportively Speaking

By Bill Rudledge

The decision of the board promoting the Army-Navy charity game in New York Dec. 13 to charge scribes $50 per cent in the press box will cause widespread alarm among practitioners of the sports writing profession. Of course, the high-priced admission tickets will be paid for by the papers when the writer turns in his list of "expenses"—or else I am sure few scribes could afford to attend the fray.

The danger of the decision lies in the fact that it may spread and sport reporters will cease to be regarded as distinguished guests but as cash customers.

There has been a marked tendency in the opposite direction. Press boxes have been enclosed in glass and equipped with the best lighting and heating fixtures. At many stadiums the university serves a luncheon at the half. Everything was being done for the convenience of the writers. This imparted to the scribes a benevolent attitude towards the school.

Iowa was given a lot of bum writeups from reporters working in the open-faced stands of the old stadium. The well-equipped press boxes of the new stadium have greatly improved the tone of stories on Hawkeye games here.

It is my suggestion that if things have reached such a state that the fourth estate must be taxed, that the universities introduce a course on "Sport Spectation" to their curricula and make the taking of it compulsory. One semester hour credit would be given. Classes would meet in a marked off rooting section at the stadium or field house, as the case might be. Students would hand in papers on the game.

Then, too, the city council might pass an ordinance compelling the townfolk to attend, and adding the item of "season ticket" to their tax bills.

A dictum to the faculty from the university to attend all games would not cause much of a change in the revenue or attendance—for it has been my observation that all but a few of the academic personae are ardent fans. The game from the professor's viewpoint was vividly expounded "By an Assistant Professor" in 1926 in the October issue of Scribner's magazine. I have always regarded the piece as a brilliant bit of writing, but it has been lost under the deluge of article. Here is an excerpt:

Rule Boosts Tiger Hopes of Revenging Lions in Rhiny Final

Lions, first string frosh gridders, will battle their understudies, the Tigers, on Iowa field this afternoon. These teams met on the battle field last week with the Lions coping a 14 to 0 victory in what was to have been the final frosh grid encounter of the year. However the Tigers think they can do better than their work in that game, and have challenged the Lions to a "post season" meeting.

Bill Rule, star ball totter of the Tigers did not play in the game and the fact that he will be in there today bolsters the Tigers' chance of winning. He will be aided by Bennie Shine, fullback, Ed Garlock and Bill Hansen, halfbacks. The Lions backfield will probably have Jack Greedy at the signal post, "Toodles" Thurtle and Carl Larson, halfbacks, and Elzie Cooper at fullback. Opening holes for these ball carriers will be a strong and heavy line. Glen Baker, giant tackle, played a stellar game last week and no doubt will continue his work in today's tussle.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Nov. 19 (AP)—The signing of My Sullivan and King Tut for a 10 round boxing bout here Dec. 5 was announced today by Jerk Doran, promoter. Sullivan lost a newspaper decision to Tut in their last meeting.

Charles Galiber, business manager of the division of physical education, announced yesterday afternoon that there were still good seats available for the Iowa-Nebraska game Saturday. No definite check has been made on the ticket sale from the various quarters about the state but according to the management this will be one of the biggest games of the season.

Nebraska will bring her band of nearly 75 pieces along with a good strong cheering section. A special train will arrive in Iowa City Saturday morning with the band and football followers. No report has been received by Mr. Galiber from the Nebraska ticket office where he sent 1,200 pasteboards.

Money for Nothing

By P. G. Wodehouse

said Dr. Twist emphatically, "Is the course of the Age."

"At Healthward Ho (formerly Graveney Court), his physical culture establishment in Worcestershire, wholesale exercise and Spartan fare are the orders of the day, and Dr. Twist has, I understand, worked miracles with the most apparently hopeless cases."

"It is the boast of Dr. Twist that he makes New Men for Old."

"I am, sir, 'Yrs. etc., 'Moderation in All Things,' 'Should The Chaperon Be Restored?' To the Editor, 'Daily Express,' 'Sir:'

A far more crying need than that of the chaperon in these modern days is for a supervisor of the middle aged man who has allowed himself to get 'out of shape.'"

"At Healthward Ho (formerly Graveney Court) in Worcestershire, where Dr. Alexander Twist, the well-known American physician and physical culture expert, ministers to such cases, wonders have been achieved by means of simple fare and mild, but regular, exercise."

"It is the boast of Dr. Twist that he makes New Men for Old."

"I am, sir, 'Yrs. etc., 'Vigilant.'"

These letters and many others, though bearing a pleasing variety of signatures, proceeded from a single gift pen—that of Dr. Twist himself—and, among that class of the public that consistently does itself too well when the gong goes and yet is never wholly free from wistful aspirations toward a better liver, they had created a scattered, but quite satisfactory, interest in Healthward Ho.

Clients had enrolled themselves on the doctor's books, and now, on this summer afternoon, he was enabled to look down from his study window at a group of no fewer than 11 of them, skipping with skipping-ropes under the eye of his able and conscientious assistant, ex-Sergeant-Major Flannery.

Sherlock Holmes—and even, on one of his bright days, Dr. Watson—could have told at a glance which of those muffled figures was Mr. Flannery. He was the only one who went in instead of out, at the waistline. All the others were well up in the class of man whom Julius Caesar once expressed a desire to have about him. And pre-eminent among them in stoutness, dampness, and general misery was Mr. Lester Carmody, of Rudge Hall.

The fact that Mr. Carmody was by several degrees the most unhappy-looking member of this little band of martyrs was due to his distress being mental as well as physical. He was allowing his mind, for the hundredth time, to dwell on the paralyzing cost of these hygienic proceedings.

Thirty guineas a week, thought Mr. Carmody as he bounded up and down, four pound ten a day . . . Three shillings and ninepence an hour . . . Three solid farthings an hour . . . To meditate on these figures was like turning a sword in his heart. For Lester Carmody loved money as he loved nothing else in this world except a good dinner.

Dr. Twist turned from the window. A maid had appeared bearing a card on a salver.

"Show him in," said Dr. Twist, having examined this. And presently there entered a slim young man in a gray flannel suit.

"Dr. Twist?"

"Yes, sir."

The newcomer seemed a little surprised. It was as if he had been expecting something rather more impressive, and was wondering why, if the proprietor of Healthward Ho had the ability he claimed, to make New Men for Old, he had not taken the opportunity of effecting some ameliorations in himself. For Dr. Twist was a small man, and weedy. He had a snub nose and an expression of furtive slyness. And he wore a waxed moustache.

"My name's Carmody," he said. "Hugo Carmody."

"Yes. I got your card."

"Could I have a word with your uncle?"

"Sure, if you don't mind waiting a minute. Right now," explained Dr. Twist, with a gesture toward the window, "he's occupied."

Hugo moved to the window, looked out, and started violently.

"Great Scott!" he exclaimed.

MONEY FOR NOTHING—GAL 2

He gaped down at the group below. Mr. Carmody and colleagues had now discarded the skipping-ropes and were performing some unpleasant looking bending and stretching exercises, holding their hands above their heads and swinging painfully from what one may loosely term their waists. It was a spectacle calculated to astonish any nephew.

"How long has he got to go on like that?" asked Hugo, awed.

"They'll be quitting soon now. Then a cold shower and rubdown, and they'll be through till lunch."

"Cold shower?"

"Yes."

"You mean to say you make Uncle Lester take cold shower baths?"

"That's right."

A look of respect came into Hugo's face as he gazed upon this master of making him tie himself in knots under a blazing sun, could lure Uncle Lester within ten yards of a cold shower bath was entitled to credit.

"I suppose, after all this," he said, "they do themselves pretty well at lunch?"

"They have a lean mutton-chop apiece, with green vegetables and dry toast."

"Is that all?"

"That's all."

"And to drink?"

"Just water."

"Followed, of course, by a spot of port?"

"No, sir."

"No port?"

"Certainly not."

"You mean—literally—no port?"

"Not a drop. If your old man had gone easier on the port, he'd not have needed to come to Healthward Ho."

"I say," said Hugo, "did you invent this name?"

"Sure. Why?"

"Oh, I don't know. I just thought I'd ask."

"Say, while I think of it," said Dr. Twist, "have you any cigarettes?"

"Oh, rather." Hugo produced a bulging case. "Turkish this side, Virginian that."

"Not for me. I was only going to say that, when you meet your uncle, he'd not think he deserved quite all that seemed to be coming to him at Healthward Ho."

"Not allowed . . . ? You mean to say you tie Uncle Lester into a lover's knot, shoot him under a cold shower, push a lean chop into him accompanied by water, and then don't even let the poor old chap get his lips around a single gasper?"

"That's right."

"Well, all I can say is," said Hugo, "it's no life for a refined Caucasian."

Dazed by the information he had received, he began to potter aimlessly about the room. He was not particularly fond of his uncle. Mr. Carmody's practice of giving him no allowance and keeping him imprisoned all the year round at Rudge would alone have been enough to check anything in the nature of tenderness, but he did not think he deserved quite all that seemed to be coming to him at Healthward Ho.

He mused upon his uncle. A complex character. A man with Lester Carmody's loathing for expenditure ought by rights to have been a simple liver, existing off hot milk and triturated sawdust, like an American millionaire. That Fate should have given him together with his prudence in money matters, a recklessness as regarded the pleasures of the table seemed ironic.

"I see they've quit," said Dr. Twist, with a glance out of the window. "If you want to have a word with your uncle, you could do it now. No bad news, I hope?"

"If there is, I'm the one that's going to get it. Between you and me," said Hugo, "I've come to try to touch him for a bit of money."

"Is that so?" said Dr. Twist, interested. Anything to do with money always interested the well known American physician and physical culture expert.

"Yes," said Hugo. "Five hundred quid, to be exact."

He spoke a little despondently, for, having arrived at the window again, he was in a position now to take a good look at his uncle. And so forbidding had bodily toil and mental disturbance rendered the latter's expression that he found the fresh young hopes with which he had started out on this expedition rapidly ebbing away. If Mr. Carmody were to burst—and he looked as if he might do so at any moment—he, Hugo, being his nearest of kin, would inherit, but, failing that, there seemed to be no cash in sight whatever.

"Though when I say 'touch,' he went on, "I don't mean quite that. The stuff is really mine. My father left me a few thousand, you see, but most injudiciously made Uncle Lester my trustee, and I'm not allowed to get at the capital without the old blighter's consent. And now a pal of mine in London has offered me a share in a new nightclub he's starting, if I will put up five hundred pounds."

"I see."

"And what I ask myself," said Hugo, "is will Uncle Lester part? That's what I ask myself. I can't say I'm betting on it."

"From what I have seen of Mr. Carmody, I shouldn't say that, parting was the thing he does best."

"He's got absolutely no gift for it whatever," said Hugo gloomily.

"Well, I wish you luck," said Dr. Twist. "But don't you try to bribe him with cigarettes."

"Do what?"

"Bribe him with cigarettes. After they have been taking the treatment for a while, most of these birds would give their soul for a coffee-milk."

Hugo started. He had not thought of this; but, now that it had been called to his attention, he saw that it was most certainly an idea.

"And don't keep him standing around longer than you can help. He ought to get under that shower as soon as possible."

"I suppose I couldn't tell him that, owing to my pleading and persuasion, you've consented to let him off a cold shower today?"

"No, sir."

"It would help," urged Hugo. "It might just sway the issue, as it were."

"Sorry. He must have his shower. When a man's been exercising and has got himself into a perfect lather of sweat . . ."

"Keep it clean," said Hugo coolly.

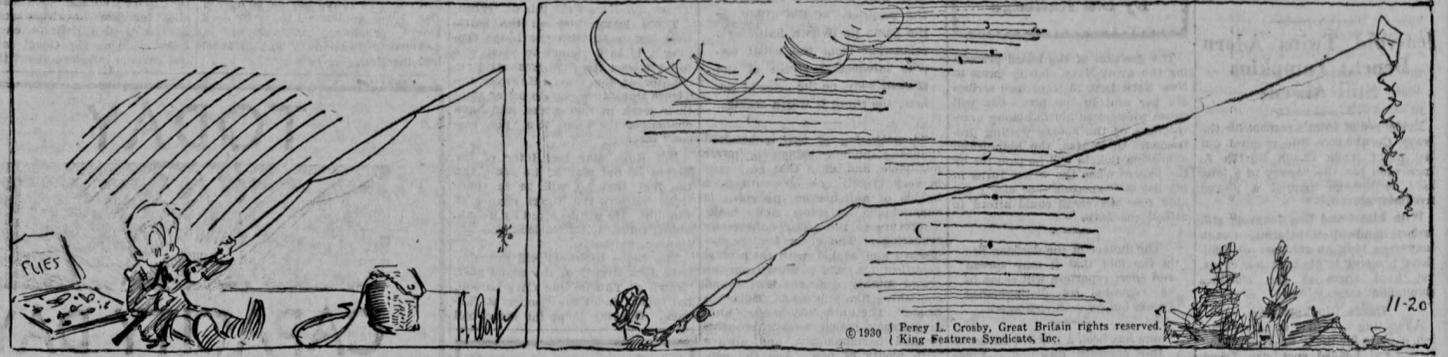

"There is no need to stress the physical side. Oh, very well, then, I suppose I shall have to say to tact and charm of manner. But I wish to goodness I hadn't got to spring business matters on him on top of what seems to have been a slightly hectic morning."

He shot his cuffs, pulled down his waistcoat, and walked with a resolute step out of the room. He was about to try to get into the ribs of a man who, for a lifetime, had been saving up to be a miser and who, even apart from this trait in his character, held the subversive view that the less money young men had the better for them. Hugo was a gay optimist, cheerful of soul and a mighty singer in the bath, but he could not feel very sanguine. However, the Carmody's were a bulldog breed. He decided to have a pop at it.

South Carolina Senator, Nationally Known, But Still "Cotton Ed" to Friends

Ellison Durant Smith has gained national recognition as United States senator, but to his friends he is still "Cotton Ed." And by friends and foes alike it has been conceded that he is an authority on agriculture, especially in the field of legislation.

He has spent many years in the study of cotton and other economic subjects that relate to agriculture.

Except for four years as a member of the state legislature Smith had no experience in public office until he was elected to the senate in 1908. He had been active, however, in promoting organization of the cotton producers of the south and it was as an organizer of the Southern Cotton association that he acquired the wide spread acquaintance in South Carolina which enabled him to defeat a large field of opponents for the senatorship.

When elected in 1926 for his fourth consecutive term, he shared with Ben Tillman alone the distinction of having been chosen by his native state for more than three terms since before the Civil war.

Senator Smith was instrumental in the establishment of the Muscle Shoals power and nitrate plant in Alabama, and has declared that the plant will stand as his monument.

Other measures for which the senator claims credit included the Smith-Lever cotton futures act which regulates future trading in cotton on the exchanges, the first restrictive immigration bill which was passed over President Woodrow Wilson's veto, and various laws pertaining to freight rates.

Purchasing for Family an Art Says Brigham

"Purchasing for a family is a business that the average house wife is now running haphazardly," said Alice Brigham, instructor of home economics, in her talk on "Present trends in the standardization of household textiles" during the home and family hour over WSUI yesterday.

"The spending job of the families in America constitutes the largest and most important business in the world economically, and has psychological and physiological importance also," Miss Brigham continued.

She suggested that the fear of displaying ignorance kept so many purchasers from asking questions while shopping; that they point at the article and return home with a purchase they know nothing of, sooner than have the clerk know they are in doubt of what they want.

"Labels that give size, weight, and also quality would be helpful," Miss Brigham went on, "and people have just begun to realize it. The division of simplified practice of the department of commerce, has received 30,000 requests for a regulation that will require manufacturers to specify quality on labels."

Mechanical Engineering Instructor Has Been Soldier, Prospector and "Mountie"

By Theo Papakostas

Once a lone, mounted-policeman in Canada, observing the pale, shifting colors of the Northern Lights, John Fielding, instructor of mechanical engineering, finds himself surrounded by students working over the bright lights of a steel furnace.

Mr. Fielding says that the gypsy in his blood prevents him from sticking to one thing for long, and as a result, he has led a varied and interesting life.

As a young lad in England, Mr. Fielding was apprenticed to the village blacksmith. He was sent to a technical school and won a scholarship to the Royal Ordnance academy at Manchester. He became so proficient in the art of steel heating and molding that he was given a position on the military staff to do steel work in war materials.

Joins English Army
Mr. Fielding became disgusted with the prim, proper English way of doing things. When the wanderlust first gripped him, and he wanted to go to India to hunt big game.

He served in the British army for a while, but bought his discharge, and came to Canada where he became a mounted-policeman, made friends with Indians, miners, trappers, and hunters, and learned their lingo. He believes that the redskin is the most religious of all people, because, after he has killed an enemy, he mourns for him before he celebrates his victory. Canadian lumber camps in those times were run on an entirely different basis than the modern camps, says Mr. Fielding. The lumber-jacks couldn't even talk at meal-time for fear of wasting time, but pointed for what they wanted.

Watches "Ghost Wolves"
Some of the most enjoyable hours of his life, according to Mr. Fielding, were the times he spent alone riding, often 40 miles a day, through mountains and forests in Canada, in close communion with nature, and watching the Northern Lights, which the Indians called "ghost wolves."

Soon he bought his discharge from police service and started to look for gold in the Black Hills of South Dakota, Buffalo Bill, Calamity Jane, Deadwood Dick, and the members of several Indian tribes were only a few of the interesting persons he saw at Deadwood, S.D. Mr. Fielding had the bad luck to have the claim of his one rich gold strike jumped, as so often was the case of young gold seekers. He was a passenger on the last trip of the famous stage coach which traveled between Deadwood and Spearfish, S. D.

Catches an Army Crook
When the World war broke out, Mr. Fielding, anxious to see action, enlisted immediately and went to France, instead of going into officers' training. He became a top-sergeant and did convoy work. He did considerable policing, and while in the army he caught the crook, Harry Jenkins, alias "Hi-Jinx" a second-story worker from Cleveland, O. "Hi-Jinx" stole the small earnings of the soldiers, but he was trapped by Mr. Fielding and sent to Ft. Leavenworth, Kan.

In 1922, Mr. Fielding came to the University of Iowa. He teaches fabrication of steel and methods of heating steel and bears the title of steel technologist. Mr. Fielding has perfected a machine for polishing steel, reducing the process from eight steps to five.

Professor Martin Sketches Changes of Last 50 Years

Changes wrought in varied fields during the past thousand years have been exceeded by those of the last 50 when vast shifts have been made in the worlds of industry, economics, politics, morals, and religion.

Prof. Herbert Martin, acting head of the University of Iowa's department of philosophy, has expressed that belief and has sketched some of the factors.

With the machine banishing vocations and creating a multitude of unemployed men, Professor Martin declares that a limitation of population is a possible ultimate solution.

Since it no longer is necessary to justify education, leaders now are faced with the problem of determining the proper content of education, he said.

When suffrage was granted to women, much more influence in the formation of national policies would have resulted had women formed an independent group. Instead, they joined the Republican and Democratic ranks, thereby "doubling the prevailing evils," Professor Martin believes.

"Old fossils" who have become atrophied and have failed to keep pace with modern conditions are to be censured more than young people. Moral conduct always has to do with situations, he said, and the present-day situations are far different from those of the nineteenth century.
