Illini Wallop Hawkeyes in Easy Victory

Iowa Defense Permits Rivals to Gain Big Lead at Half

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Feb. 28 (AP)—Illinois rejuvenated basketball team tonight ran up its sixth consecutive Big Ten cage victory tonight, swamping Iowa, 31 to 13. In the closing home game of the Illinois season, Illinois got away to a fast start and all through the first period, which closed, 24 to 8, scored almost as it pleased. Harper and Bennett, aided by Red Owen, found it easy to break through the Hawkeye defense and the decision was well in hand before the opening period ended.

Iowa tightened up in the second period and managed to hold Illinois to a 7 to 5 advantage, but found little opportunity to do any shooting. In this period, Williamson, Iowa's high scoring forward, crashed into the wall and was carried from the floor.

Hoover May Get Fund for Relief Work

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—A $100,000,000 emergency relief fund for the unemployed to be placed at the disposal of President Hoover was proposed in the senate today while Secretary Hyde outlined the basis on which drought sufferers might obtain government food loans.

About the time Senator Caraway, Democrat, Arkansas, contended Hyde was "deliberately holding up" the money appropriated in the $20,000,000 supplemental drought relief fund, the secretary announced the administration arrangements had been completed.

Food loans may be obtained by farmers from the $20,000,000 fund in two ways under the plan outlined in two ways under the plan outlined. Farmers may apply for loans either through the agricultural credit corporation or through direct loans from the seed loan office, dependent upon "necessity, security and the individual case."

The department of agriculture expects to be ready to entertain applications for loans from the $20,000,000 fund Monday, and that loans would be made the latter part of the week.

Hyde said a committee would be set up in each of 21 drought stricken states to aid in administering the fund respecting agricultural corporations.

CENTER OF TESTIMONY ON FISK

Above is shown a portion of the Quadrangle addition built in 1925, controversy over which has featured several sessions of legislative investigation into the university. Verne Marshall, instigator of the inquiry, has asserted his intention to prove on this building his charges of incompetence against J. M. Fisk, superintendent of grounds and buildings, who took over supervision of the job when certified checks were returned to low bidders.

Witnesses on this matter have so far been representatives of the building and contracting profession.

Veterans Get Loan Money

Men File Applications at Rate of 1,000 Per Hour

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—Veterans loan applications clicked through governmental machinery at the rate of more than 1,000 an hour today as appeals went forth to permit those most in need to be allowed to file first.

Chief Finance Officer H. W. Breining of the veterans bureau estimated that more than 10,000 checks for upwards of $4,000,000 had gone out from the 54 regional offices during the day.

Long lines of men assembled at the Washington regional office. Of the 1,200 applicants received at noon, only 78 were for loans on certificates that never before had been borrowed upon.

From 500 to 600 applications per hour were handled in the Washington office, and officials said a similar rate should have been maintained in the 53 other regional offices.

Next week, Breining said, checks would rise to 25,000 daily, and he expected them to remain at that level through March. He said that on the basis of 25,000 checks daily the total would approximate $7,500,000 a day during the peak month of March, after which he expected loans to start declining.

He said $20,000,000 already had been obtained from the treasury to add to the $30,000,000 the bureau had on hand. Telegraphic warrants for $17,500,000 were dispatched to the regional offices and will be added as needed.

$22,000,000 Iowa's Share

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—Iowa World war veterans will be able to borrow $22,000,000 on their veterans loan certificates under the measure passed by congress yesterday over President Hoover's veto, it was estimated today by accountants.

The 17,000 veterans living in Iowa comprise 2.4 per cent of the total in the United States. The estimated face value of Iowa's certificates on which no loans have been made is $44,000,000. Fifty per cent of the face value can be borrowed under the new law.

Return Rates Increase Tax

Big Incomes Will Pay 3 Times Amount of Last Year

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—More than a million citizens, approximately half of those who must pay income tax on March 15, will have to pay three times as much tax to the government this year as they did last year.

The situation is brought about through the return to the 1928 income tax rates after a one per cent reduction for one year on incomes in 1929 payable in 1930.

The rates on normal income which must be paid this year are 1 1/2 per cent on the first $4,000 of net normal income, 3 per cent on the next $4,000 of normal income and 5 per cent on all above $8,000. Last year the taxpayer having $4,000 or less normal income paid only half per cent, those having from $4,000 to $8,000 income paid 2 per cent and above that on normal income the rate was 4 per cent.

Whether the income tax returns will show more or less than received in 1928 is one of the problems that is puzzling treasury officials. They are awaiting the March 15 instalment on 1928 tax to determine just how great a deficit will face the government at the end of the 1931 fiscal year next June 30.

In the present fiscal year starting last July 1 a total of $1,167,126,860 has been collected in income taxes as compared with $1,246,979,538 in the previous fiscal year. The government at the close of business on Feb. 28 had a deficit of $23,027,098, having collected from all sources $2,063,890,901 and having spent a total of $2,409,918,000.

Viceroy Will Not Yield to Chief Gandhi

NEW DELHI, India, Feb. 28 (AP)

Mahatma Gandhi is going to see the viceroy again tomorrow in the last effort to straighten out the tangled Indian political situation, but tonight it looked as though their efforts to reach an agreement would fail.

This afternoon the working committee of the all India congress party voted to reject the viceroy's terms of settlement and no one would say what the result would be.

It was understood that the deadlock followed the government's refusal to grant Gandhi's demands that Indians be given the right to make their own salt. On this issue the viceroy has said that the salt revenue law can be changed only by the legislature.

Lord Irwin also was said to be determined not to yield the right to see the boycott British goods, arguing that it would be unthinkable to permit the congress party or any other Indian group to tear down the British commercial trade.

Playing Fair

By ROLAND WHITE

When Verne Marshall introduced into his newspaper account of an Iowa State Medical society meeting in Des Moines 10 weeks ago reference to the internal college of medicine strife four years ago which brought about extensive resignations, he made his first public move against the University of Iowa administration.

Since then Cedar Rapids Gazette newboys have been to Iowa City several times hawking papers with cries of "Extry! All the big scandal about the university."

Since then the Gazette editor has written reams of copy, largely charges against President Walter A. Jessup and his associates.

Since then he has assembled those accusations into 20 counts against the administration in an open letter to state officials which appeared almost verbatim in the house resolution for investigation. During all this time he has been courageous, apparently sincere, and impressive—but never fair and always dictatorial.

Two days after appointment of the inquiry committee Marshall promised in a Gazette article that "The sensational material from which The Gazette-Republican might have, but has not, printed a series of articles that would make past articles read like Sunday school quarterlies soon will be broadcast at the open hearings of the legislative committee."

Professing a desire merely to "clear or condemn," Marshall nevertheless indicated that he would be satisfied to "call off" the investigation if he could obtain the resignations of at least 10 board of education and university staff members, whom he named.

Instigator of the investigation, Marshall was called to the stand at the outset to present the charges upon which legislative inquiry was to be based. It was upon understanding that this was a preliminary setting forth of the basis for investigation that Attorney Emmett Tinley accepted denial of his desire to cross examine Marshall.

But what Verne Marshall said on the stand Monday was not confined to basic accusations. He was permitted to testify much as a star witness. He entered two exhibits on the records. He dwelt at length on handling of Rockefeller medical endowment funds and retold what he had written in the Gazette concerning Iowa's athletic difficulties. He shared the double role of presenter of charges and witness. In neither capacity was what he alleged put to the test, but it made good copy for newspapers throughout the state.

A detective Marshall had hired Dec. 26 was made committee investigator and placed in charge of certain witnesses. An attorney whom he supplied with material and who professed to be seeking facts did not lose his court room habit of trying to build up a case.

There have been phases of official investigation on like these which he has made it seem very much like an extension of Marshall's crusade.

One of these is the query put to Representative Byron G. Allen, subchairman of the committee, by Representative Samuel D. Whiting of Johnson county, met with denial: "Is it true, Mr. Allen, that Verne Marshall intimated to the house committee on educational institutions (of which Allen is chairman) that if he were allowed to conduct this investigation in his own way he would furnish you with the dope?"

Only master steersmanship can save the committee from being in the maelstrom of politics or smashed against the rock of public opinion.

Activities of Fisk Remain Investigation Subject; Cedar Rapids Estimator on Stand

Lambertson Gives Testimony From Report Prepared at Request of Master Builders Association

By JOHN HENDERSON (Special to The Daily Iowan)

DES MOINES, Feb. 28—Whether or not the university department of grounds and buildings lost or saved money by building the Quadrangle addition in 1925 was expounded from opposite sides at this morning's session of the legislative committee investigating the University of Iowa, and was supplemented this afternoon by testimony relating to other activities of J. M. Fisk, head of the department.

Both witnesses were examined directly by Dennis M. Kelleher, attorney for the committee, from typed sheets, telling what would be said on the stand, and prepared by Verne Marshall, managing editor of the Cedar Rapids Gazette who has charged Fisk with incompetency and misuse of state materials and labor. Cross examination was conducted by Emmett Tinley, attorney for the board of education which has been named in other charges brought by Marshall in his demand for the general investigation.

Harry F. Lambertson, estimator for the Hopp Construction company of Cedar Rapids, described in his testimony a report compiled by him showing the cost of construction of the Quadrangle's inner tier of rooms and the cost as it would have been, had original specifications approved by the board of education been approved. According to his findings the state saved $21,735.50 by rejecting the low contractor's bid of $145,433, and erected the addition for $123,256.08.

Lambertson contended that the low bidder the work been awarded to the low bidder the cost would have been $123,707.20 or $9,000 less if similar changes had been allowed.

Reported by Request Lambertson made his report at the request of the Master Builders association shortly after the completion of the addition.

A $400 discrepancy between Lambertson's report and the state report which was caused by the state's refusal to include cut stone work in the deductions when nothing had replaced it in the building, brought the university's statement of savings to $17,027.20.

In cross examining the witness, however, Attorney Tinley brought out that Kelleher had omitted an $8,000 and a $6,000 item from the savings which would have made the university's deductions still lower than those of the Master Builders association.

Cites Thirty-Six Items Lambertson cited 37 items in which the state had used less expensive materials or methods of workmanship under Fisk's direction in order to accomplish its savings. Under Tinley's questioning, however, he admitted that his estimates of variations from specifications were not derived from first hand knowledge in four or five instances. He said that he had obtained his information as to plumbing, painting, electrical work and other items from sub-contractors.

He confessed, when pressed, that although he had testified to the state's saving $1,000 in floor finishing, he did not know whether the cost of waxing a floor would be more or less than the cost of varnish or shellac.

When Lambertson was asked by Mr. Kelleher if such changes in specification would ordinarily be permitted in good practice by a contractor, the witness said that it would be possible with the permission of the architect, but that permission would not ordinarily be granted.

Did Not Compute Overhead Lambertson said that in making his reductions he had not computed overhead expense such as insurance etc., but that this was sometimes done by contractors.

L. H. Humphrey of Detroit, who graduated from grounds university in 1924, refused to be shaken in his assertions before the committee that he had done "roustabout and flunkey" work on J. M. Fisk's personal property while working his way through school and had been paid solely by the state. The remainder of his testimony related to his work as a laborer on the chemistry building and his description of general labor conditions on that construction work. He charged several times in answering Attorney Kelleher's questions that mistakes and carelessness in construction had resulted in several mishaps during erection of the building.

Worked on Chemistry Building Humphrey was employed by the department of grounds and buildings in the summer of 1922, at which time he worked on the chemistry building construction almost continuously, except for times when he and others employed at the same place were sent to Fisk's home or apartment houses to do odd repair jobs. He said that he and associates had built a driveway for Mr. Fisk among other things, and in no instance during that summer had he received other pay.

Three Major Issues Face State Solons

Taxes, Appropriations, Redistricting Due for Consideration

DES MOINES, Feb. 28 (AP)—Tax revision, appropriations, and congressional redistricting remain three of the dominant subject which will confront the Iowa legislature after its 10 day vacation, began today.

The assembly has made a start on the tax program outlined last December by the joint committee, but the larger part of its proposals still require action. Only one tax revision bill, giving the state board of assessment and review greater powers, has passed both houses.

Tax Bill Awaits Senate The income tax bill is awaiting action in the senate, whose tax committee has approved it with recommendations that some of the rates be changed. As passed by the house, the bill calls for a tax on individual incomes and one on corporations.

The senate likewise has passage of a major tax bill to its credit. It approved the measure to establish a county assessor system, which also has been reported favorably by the house tax committee.

Change Proposals Advanced Several other proposals to change the basis of taxation have been introduced in both branches of the assembly. An excise tax on oleomargarine has been recommended by the house and senate committees. The senate has passed a bill increasing inheritance tax rates and has killed a proposal to license gasoline filling stations.

After the recess the legislature will be able to take up the question of congressional redistricting, because President Hoover's reapportionment schedule will be made official March 4 if congress takes no action in the meantime. Under that plan Iowa will have nine instead of 11 representatives.

Public Utilities in Spotlight Public utilities bid fair to occupy considerable attention during the latter half of the session, with a number of bills providing for their regulation on file. The list of the measures is creation of a utilities commission with regulatory and supervisory powers over all companies operating in Iowa.

When the legislature recessed last night the governor had approved 11 senate bills and seven house bills. In addition four senate bills and 12 house bills either were in the hands of the enrolling committee or with the governor awaiting action.

There also were 53 senate bills awaiting house action and 71 house bills awaiting consideration by the senate.

Final Agreement With France Still Waits Approval

ROME, Feb. 28 (AP)—Italy and Great Britain today reached an agreement in principle for the settlement of naval problems left over by the London conference last year, and although the accord is subject to French approval, in official circles here there was a general feeling that it is all but signed.

Arthur Henderson, British foreign secretary who headed his nation's naval delegation at Paris and here, said tonight before he started back for the French capital, "We'll get an agreement in Paris if we do as well there as we did here."

France-Italian Agreement This tentative accord which, when it is ratified, will obviate the danger of a Franco-Italian naval race is regarded by many as even more important politically than it is in a military sense.

Here in Rome Italian prestige is uppermost in the official mind, for there is always present Premier Mussolini's principle that Italy is entitled to an important place in the world, and many arguments based on the negotiations which ended today have been brought forward as indications that Italy's diplomatic ability, judgment and importance have been fully recognized.

Mussolini on Scene Behind the scenes Mussolini has been active during the period of the negotiations, and he took things into his own hands yesterday. Last night at a dinner in the British embassy he virtually concluded the accord with Mr. Henderson.

The agreement which both British and Italian officials expect will be approved by France tomorrow when the British delegates stop at Paris on the way to London, settles the Franco-Italian naval rivalry for the five years' duration of the London pact, which is thus transformed into a five-power treaty.

Gets Federal Post Youth Confesses to Killing Sweetheart at Gary, Indiana, Party

VALPARAISO, Ind., Feb. 28 (AP)—His confession and two stories of boasted advances today were woven into the case by which the state expects to send Virgil Kirkland, 20, to the electric chair for the murder of 18 year old Arlene Draves, of Gary. In the confession which the accused young man made shortly after viewing the corpse of the young woman at the morgue in the early hours of last Nov. 30, he admitted attacking her.

Miss Draves' tragic death followed a drinking party at a Gary home attended by 16 young men and women. Five men, two of them married, were accused of attacking and murdering her. Kirkland's four companions in the alleged brutality will be tried later. Guests at the party heard Virgil profess his love for Miss Draves three hours before her mutilated body was left at the home of a physician by two companions.

The Pastime Theater will open its doors 10 minutes to 1 and the showing of Cimarron will begin at 1 o'clock instead of 1:30. Continuous showing from 1 to 11.

In the course of constructing the building which included the collapse of a portion of a brick wall as the result of insufficient ties at the time of the wall bulge, mentioned previously, and the caving of a ceiling in a finished room.

Attorney Tinley's cross examination on these points as the afternoon waned when Senator Doran announced if the purpose of the cross examination was to show that such incidents might have happened in any large piece of construction work it would be unnecessary to proceed as the committee understood that already, Mr. Tinley admitted that it was his intention and agreed that if it was already plain to the committee that such accidents were unavoidable, he would go no further.

Humphrey's contention in regard to the occurrences was that there never had been any inspectors to watch the work as it proceeded.

Other incidents to which he referred were the omission of pipe conduits which made it necessary to chisel "numerous" holes through floors and ceilings, and the misplacement of a concrete column which had to be moved out of a doorway.

"There was always somebody correcting errors," he asserted.

In an effort to discover how the witness had been brought to the hearing Mr. Tinley was advised that the attorney general's office had brought Mr. Humphrey without the cooperation of Verne Marshall.

The witness first testified to having met Marshall on one occasion while at school with him, but later rescinded the statement after conference with Mr. Kellieher, Mr. Marshall, and Special Investigator Roy Lapitz. He explained that it was Mr. Marshall's brother.

When cross-examined, Humphrey stated that he could not remember what part of the odd jobs on Fisk's property he had been paid for by the state. He could not fix either the amount of time spent in working at these jobs, but insisted he had been on the university payroll all of the time until his "flunkey" work of early spring in 1923.

Several men suggested by Mr. Tinley as having worked on the addition to Fisk's home were unknown to the witness who had stated that he had in turn been the sole assistant to the various technicians sent to the Fisk work.

Humphrey also admitted that he did not know whether corrections made in the chemistry building were due to changes in plans, which he had never seen, or to mistakes of workmen.

The witness added that he had obtained most of his technical information second hand from a contractor.

The committee has adjourned until 9 a.m. Monday. It plans to continue its hearings all of next week, and no time has been set as yet for its removal to Iowa City to inspect the university plant and records.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—Permission was sought from the interstate commerce commission today by southeastern railroads to make an experimental reduction in freight rates on automobiles; with the object of meeting motor truck competition which is said to have diverted much traffic from their lines.

The carriers propose to install the new rates from automobile assembling plants in St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Denver, Memphis, New Orleans, Houston, Dallas and Oklahoma City. The plan projected would offer the shippers a scale of $30 per car for 25 miles; $62 for 200 miles; $142 for 400 miles; and $185 for 500 miles with proportionate charges for intermediate distances.

CHICAGO, Feb. 28 (AP)—Raymond J. Hurley, special representative of the Chicago board of trade, said today a trip through Iowa and Nebraska had convinced him that a "spirit of optimism" over improving business and industrial conditions is growing in the two states.

He returned yesterday from a series of group meetings in Sioux City and Des Moines, Ia., and Lincoln, Neb., to promote grain belt participation in securities traded in on the board of trade.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 28 (AP)—A bandit was killed and two police detectives were wounded late today in a gunfight at Fourth street and Hennepin avenue, in the loop, after an attempted robbery of the City Loan company, on the second floor of the Northwestern building.

The bandit, who was unidentified, was shot several times. He staggered across Hennepin avenue, and fell dead on the sidewalk.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Feb. 28 (AP)—Plans to study and chart characteristics of local dialects in the United States and Canada are being made by a committee at Yale university.

Prof. Eduard Prokosch of Yale, a member of the committee of the American council of learned societies, named to compile a linguistic atlas of these two countries, announced today that work would start next summer.

Similar linguistic atlases, he said, already have been published, or are in process of preparation, in European countries.

CHEROKEE, Feb. 28 (AP)—Four specific charges alleging irregular transactions in dealing with clients were filed here today in disbarment proceedings against J. P. Gregory, Cherokee attorney, by a committee of three lawyers.

Senate Says Lucas Held Fund Report

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—Robert H. Lucas, executive director of the Republican national committee, was declared by the senate campaign funds committee today to be "chargeable with a willful violation" of the corrupt practices act in failing to report personal expenditures in opposing Senator Norris, Republican, Nebraska, last fall.

The committee made known this conclusion in an exhaustive report on its Nebraska inquiry which Chairman Nye submitted to the senate and had read without comment.

A report on its Pennsylvania investigation will be submitted Monday.

The Nebraska report said the Lucas incident was the "final episode" of a series of "secret" attempts to defeat Norris. It said Lucas made a "secret expenditure of some $4,000" in connection with the "circulation of scurrilous literature" against Norris and candidates in other states and failed to report this expenditure after the legally prescribed dates had passed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—The charge that Robert H. Lucas appeared willfully to have violated the corrupt practices act brought a prompt statement from him tonight that he had reported his expenditures to "the clerk of the senate on Dec. 22."

In his statement telephoned to the Republican national committee from Jacksonville, Fla., tonight, the executive director said: "My personal expenditures of the last campaign were paid Dec. 2 and no report was due until Jan. 1. My report was made and filed with the clerk of the senate on Dec. 22."

CHEROKEE, Feb. 28 (AP)—Four specific charges alleging irregular transactions in dealing with clients were filed here today in disbarment proceedings against J. P. Gregory, Cherokee attorney, by a committee of three lawyers.

A petition alleging irregularities in conducting law business was filed against Gregory a week ago in Cherokee district court and Judge C. C. Bradley appointed the three investigating attorneys. Officers were unable to locate Gregory at the time the warrant was issued, but he surrendered in Omaha Feb. 22.

ARICA, Chile, Feb. 28 (AP)—Unconfirmed reports drifting over the border from southern Peru today said some of the leaders in the Peruvian rebellion had been recognized as men known to be communistic in sympathy.

The rebellion, these reports indicated, seemed to be increasing in intensity and loyal troops are on the way south for a final drive against the rebels, who appear to be well entrenched.

The leaders of the revolt seem to be working along the lines of a well-planned campaign and there was a possibility they would thrust at Lima if the government weakened the garrison there by sending troops into the south.

Officers Raid Residence of Leo Budreau

A raid by city, county, state, and federal officers on the home of Leo Budreau, 1921 N. Governor street, at 12:30 last night netted one gallon and two half pints of alleged liquor. It was found in brush outside the house.

Three women and one young man were in the house, but were not held. Officer Wes Sedivec stated that while holding the door to prevent their escaping he saw a man make a get-away.

Officers who conducted the raid were Don McComas, county sheriff, Preston Koser, deputy sheriff, P. D. Van Wagoner, state agent, Tom Cooper and William Avery federal agents, and Wes Sedivec, city police officer.

The Lighthouse Inn at North Liberty was the second target for the raiding force early this morning where a small amount of alcohol was recovered. The 40 customers who were frequenting the place at the time were held behind locked doors until the authorities had completed their search.

House Members to Forget Differences at Close of Session

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—Republicans and Democrats in the house intend to shelve their differences for at least a few hours before the next congress convenes.

An informal committee is getting ready for an old-fashioned get-together after the bang of Speaker Longworth's gavel at noon next Wednesday puts an end to the seventy-first congress.

Democrats who have accused Republicans of "playing politics with human misery" and Republicans who have said Democrats were simply "playing politics" are expected to forget their past actions long enough to join the singing and listen to a musical program.

Prof. Roy Flickinger Host to Speaker

Prof. Roy C. Flickinger, head of the department of Latin and Greek, will entertain at an informal dinner this evening at Iowa Union in honor of the Rev. O. F. Jordan of Park Ridge, Ill., who will speak at vesper service.

The Rev. Mr. Jordan was pastor when Professor Flickinger was attending Northwestern university at Evanston, Ill.

X-Ray Makes New Bid to Pass Radium as Cancer Curative

NEW YORK, Feb. 28 (AP)—To fight cancer a 900,000 volt x-ray tube, far the biggest one in the country, is being built for the New York Memorial hospital.

Ordinary x-rays, outdone by radium in a series of tests at Memorial hospital, are coming back to renew their bid for supremacy.

This news was given to the Optical Society of America and the American Physical society today by Dr. G. F. Phillips and Dr. P. S. Henshaw of Memorial hospital.

The present greatest x-ray tube is a 600,000 volt apparatus, higher than a bungalow at California Institute of Technology.

Smash Two Field House Meet Marks

Henke Beats American Indoor 440-Yard Dash Record

Smashing one American indoor record and another field house record, University of Wisconsin trackmen romped over the Iowa thimble clads 15 to 35 yesterday afternoon. Clean sweeps in the shot put and two mile run furthered the Badger cause.

Captain Henke of Wisconsin provided the biggest thrill of the afternoon when he raced away from his field to take the 440-yard dash in 1:18.9, clipping one and two-tenths seconds from the old field house record set by George Baird of Iowa in 1928, and seven-tenths of a second from the American record.

Henke High Scorer

In addition to his record smashing performance in the quarter, Henke also took first in the 50 yard dash to carry off high scoring honors with 10 points.

Sammy Behr, Cardinal shot putter of more than ordinary ability, added nearly a foot to the old field house record when he tossed the 16 pound weight 48 feet, 4 3/4 inches. In an unofficial non-competitive throw before the meet he got away one heave of 50 feet, 6 1/2 inches. This old record of 47 feet, 5 1/8 inches, was set by D. Lyon of Illinois in 1928.

Hawkeyes Maintain Tradition

Perhaps the most satisfying performance of the afternoon, from an Iowa standpoint, came in the last event when a Hawkeye quarter mile quartet upheld old Gold traditions by winning the mile relay. Everett Ferguson at anchor ran one of his best races to overcome a 20 yard lead and break the tape a scant two yards ahead of Lee of Wisconsin.

Canby, Gordon Make Efforts

After the meet Henry Canby of Iowa, who won the pole vault with a leap of 13 feet, attempted 13 feet, 6 inches, but fell short of the mark. Ed Gordon, who placed second in the 70-yard high hurdles and tied for second in the high jump, tried to better the American indoor record of 24 feet, 8 inches in the broad jump, and on two attempts attained 24 feet, 4 inches.

The victory marked the first Badger triumph over Iowa since 1925, and the second in the field house since 1922. The record now stands Iowa five victories and Wisconsin four since 1922.

Wildcats Win Cage Crown; Reiff Shines

COLUMBUS, Feb. 28 (AP)—Northwestern university Wildcats clinched the Big Ten basketball championship here tonight by defeating Ohio State 22 to 18. The game belonged to the Purple at the way, with left forward Reiff leading the attack, scoring three field goals and dropping three fouls through the hoops.

The Wildcats displayed crafty floor work in sifting through the Ohio guards. Reiff, right forward, was just behind his running mate, Reiff, in point totals for he sent two field goals down and garnered three single markers on foul throws.

Fesler played in his usual brilliant style for the Buckeyes. He led the scoring for Ohio State with three field goals.

The score at half time was Northwestern 18, Ohio State 6.

Northwestern was crowned as the Big Ten's 1931 basketball champion just night after an hectic race as the conference has ever experienced. Of course, a few games remain, as the rules do not stipulate that competition for the season ends when the title has been decided.

The clinching event came a little earlier than was expected. The Wildcats have been doing all they could towards clinching the crown, winning over all comers. But the final gesture came from their foremost rival for top honors, when the Gophers went down before Purdue and eliminated themselves as even a mathematical possibility.

Not with any idea of assisting the Purple, but with the intention of improving their record, the Bolle-makers or to be more exact, Wooden and Stewart, spilled the Northwestern. Minnesota can look back on its record with pride. Picked to finish in the second division, the team winds up in second place.

Illinois made Iowa's place in the cellar more secure with its 31 to 13 triumph. The Hawkeyes can hardly expect to win from either of its remaining foes, Northwestern tomorrow night or Purdue next Saturday.

Having left the hospital the day before the Old Gold matmen left for Oklahoma, Capt. Loren Poyner scored the squad's only point in winning a decision over his opponent. The other Hawkeye wrestler, mainstays crumbled, but Poyner played his captain role by coming through.

Experts figured Capt. Bill Henke of Wisconsin for second place in the 440 yard dash against Iowa yesterday afternoon, and then he goes and clips the American indoor record by seven-tenths of a second. Ferguson stood out for the Hawkeyes as an anchor runner on the one mile relay quartet and overcoming a 20 yard handicap to beat Lee of Wisconsin to the tape by two yards.

Two Records Made as Irish Cop Meet

Gene Howerly, Notre Dame two-miler, set a new local gym mark for that distance, winning by 20 yards from Punnam, Iowa State, in 9:30.3.

Captain Howerly, again champion, set another new Notre Dame indoor mark in the 60-yard low hurdles, running the distance in 7.01.

Rain Stops Training

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP)—Rain cut short the New York Yankees' spring training activities today but afforded the pitchers no rest from their daily task of learning how to field. Perhaps no major league manager devotes so much time to this defensive aspect of the game as does Joe McCarthy, the Yankees new pilot.

Michigan Maintains Third Place; Defeats Wisconsin 26 to 15

MADISON, Feb. 28 (AP)—In a slow game, Michigan clung to its third place in the Western conference basketball race by defeating Wisconsin, 26 to 15, tonight.

Only seven personal fouls were called on the two teams, Michigan receiving four of them.

The Badgers drew first blood on the opening tip off when Poeser dropped in a long shot, but the Wolverines ran ahead a moment later on Eveland's short field goal, and Altenhof's free throw. Then the visitors never were headed, although Wisconsin was within a point of them on two occasions in the first half, at 7 to 6, and 12 to 11.

Playing a slow, semi-stalling game in the last period, Michigan made a runaway of the game, dropping in five field goals after drawing Wisconsin's defense up the floor. The Badgers were able to count only three points in the final stanza after the half ended, 16 to 12.

Hoosiers Finish Fast to Trample Maroons

CHICAGO, Feb. 28 (AP)—Indiana's basketball team squared up for an early season defeat tonight, walling Chicago, 38 to 22, on the Maroons' home floor.

The Hoosiers took the lead at the start, and held it to the middle of the session when Chicago staged a spurt that took it to a 23-21 tie. However, Indiana stepped out and field goals by Veller, Miller and Jasper moved the Hoosiers out of danger. Chicago presented a revised lineup, with Dzubanik replacing Stephenson at forward, but failed to find a combination capable of stopping Indiana.

Stewart, Wooden Aid in Surprise Victory

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Feb. 28 (AP)—Johnny Wooden and Charley Stewart were the main springs in a Purdue rally in the last half which defeated Minnesota here tonight 33 to 28.

The game was fast but ragged throughout. Minnesota led at the half, 13 to 12, then jumped out in front toward the latter part of the second period, 22 to 17. Stewart and Wooden then flipped in five baskets between them to give the Bolle-makers a lead which they held for the rest of the game.

Cornhuskers Finish Season With Victory

LINCOLN, Feb. 28 (AP)—Nebraska closed its 1931 basketball season by defeating Oklahoma, 41 to 30, here tonight. The victory assures the Huskers of at least a tie for second place in the Big Six conference race.

Nebraska, 17 to 15, at the half, after a nip and tuck battle. Fifty times during the period the score was tied. The Huskers came back with a flash of speed to open the last half and coasted through the final quarter to victory. Approximately 3,000 persons saw the game.

Loren Poyner Scores Single Hawkeye Win

Team Closes Season With Three Won, Three Lost

(Special to The Daily Iowan)
NORMAN, Okla., Feb. 28 (AP)—University of Oklahoma wrestlers drubbed the University of Iowa grapplers 27 to 3 in the final dual meet of the year here tonight. The defeat was the worst suffered by the Hawkeyes this season.

Captain Loren Poyner, wrestling at 155, saved the Iowans from a shutout by gaining a decision over Hasbrook in the hardest fought battle of the evening. The Iowa leader, who had just been released from the hospital two days before the meet, eked out a win after two overtime periods.

Turner Elinantes Dull Fans got the thrill of the evening when Turner, 145 pounder, tossed Dull in the fast time of 61 seconds with a front grapevine. The Iowa sophomore had won two straight, and entered the ring a favorite.

White chalked up the only other fall of the meet when he pinned Claude Peer with a bar arm and half nelson after four minutes, and five seconds of grappling in the 126 pound division. The two falls gave the Oklahomans a lead that sounded taps for their Western conference opponents.

Five Points on Forfeit News of the sudden death of the sister of Sammy Erhardt, Iowa 135 pounder, caused him to forfeit and added five more points to the Oklahomans' total.

Inglis, 118, tied up a large advantage over Larry Muller to give the Sooners the first tumbles of the night. Gunter at 155, gained three more points by staying behind Al Coons the better share of the 10 minute period.

Coughlin Not So Easy In the 175 pound class, Childers, Sooner light heavy, rode Charlie Coughlin around the ring constantly, but failed to pin the plucky Hawkeye. Captain Bass and Elmer Haberkamp, heavyweights, closed the activities with a hard fought struggle which won the Oklahoma leader finally.

It was the closest Sooner win of the meet.

The Hawkeyes finished the season with 500 net points. They won from Nebraska, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, and dropped the last three meets to Chicago, Illinois, and Oklahoma.

Summary
118 pounds—Inglis (O) won from Mueller (I) by decision.
126 pounds—White (O) threw Peer (I) with bar arm and half nelson in 4:35.
135 pounds—Mayer (O) won by forfeit.

Two States Vie for J. "Yellow Kid" Weil on Fleecing Charges

HAMMOND, Ind., Feb. 28 (AP)—Two states vied today for the presence of Joseph (Yellow Kid) Weil, but possession being nine points in law, he remained right here in Hammond.

The old maestro of con games was meditating the reasons why Indiana wanted to hold him when a call came in from Decatur, Ill.

"We'd like to try Weil down here," said the voice on the other end of the wire. "We're holding his pal, Fred Buckminster, and when Weil gets here we can prosecute them both on complaint of Walter Danzeisen of Decatur. He says they got $2,500."

Northwestern Next Foe for Iowa Cagers

ILLINOIS' fast-stepping cage team turned the trick last night when it crushed the Iowa hoopers, 31-13. Tomorrow night the Hawkeyes engage the Big Ten champion Wildcats at Evanston and the new title-holders are expected to repeat their recent victory over the Iowans.

Chuck Williamson, stellar forward, was injured in the Illinois fray and may be out of the Northwestern contest. His loss would leave Coach Rollie Williams with but two first string forwards, Mowry and Kotlow. The Purple clinched the conference title last night by overcoming the Buckeyes, 32-18 with Joe Reiff again leading the attack. The contest with the Hawkeyes will be the final game on the Wildcat schedule, while the Hawkeyes travel to Lafayette next Saturday night for the finale with the rejuvenated Bolle-maker five.

Cross, Eakes Hearing Reset to Later Date

Benda Files Charges at District Court Against Two

Hearing has been postponed until 9 a.m. Monday in the case of Tom Cross and George Eakes, 14 and 16 year old boys, who were arrested Feb. 20 charged with stealing a car owned by Frank Thormann, mechanic at the Burkett-Updegraff garage. They were to have been heard yesterday.

The boys drove the car, a Ford roadster, to a place south of Nichols in an attempt to evade pursuit, and were captured in a rye field there when they were overtaken by Wesley W. Sedivec, local policeman, after a rapid chase. Sedivec fired in the air several times in an effort to halt them, and fired once at the car, narrowly missing Eakes. They were said to have stolen the car earlier in the evening of the same day.

Cross and Eakes were released Saturday by Mabel Evans, probation officer, who returned them to the custody of their parents. They are to be arraigned, however, on charges filed Saturday, to the district court, by Charles F. Benda, police chief.

Cross has fought in local boxing meets.

this theatre business!

The longer a fellow remains in the theatre business the less he knows about it. Productions which look like a million dollars in advance fall as flat as a bride's biscuits, while others that creep into theatres without ballyhoo, bombast and buncombe often reach out and wallop you flush on the entertainment button.

Three of us previewed Paramount's "THE ROYAL FAMILY OF BROADWAY" recently. To us, it was going to be "just another picture"—not great, not bad. You know what I mean. It had a marvelous cast, was the adaptation of a real stage hit, but we'd had these things happen to us before.

THIS THEATRE BUSINESS!

All of us, are feeling a little sheepish. For because of a lack-lustre title, and because we hadn't had umpsteen eulogistic wires from our home office, we had mentally rejected a production that wallops the living day-lights out of any comedy drama we've seen in a month of Sundays.

Pictures like "THE ROYAL FAMILY OF BROADWAY" justify the existence of the screen. It recreates life without bending over backward to capitalize on sex; it wasn't directed by an ex-button hole maker. If you've ever growled at Hollywood we've yammered twice that many times. And we will again. But just now we're doggoned proud of Hollywood and "THE ROYAL FAMILY OF BROADWAY." A.D.

Thompson Of, By, and For the People?

THE United States is a democracy of course. Chicago, as part of the United States, is also a democracy. Chicago has just reelected Mayor Thompson. But who really elected him? The south side districts, the foreign wards, the hoodlum belts, the black sections. And the whole of Chicago is to be governed by the choice of those elements of the city.

Without a doubt, a big share of the voters who did elect Thompson are law abiding citizens. But are these people, and the strata of society which they represent, capable of judging rightly whether the man they selected is the better man for the job? Thompson's grip over those districts is firm. The people who comprise them vote for him because he controls the leaders who in turn control those sections.

If the better elements of a city's population want their type of man in power, they must get out and vote in sufficient masses to swing the balance to their side. Their passivity in a case like Chicago's election is their own damnation. However, in a cosmopolitan city the size of Chicago, where the pull of the less desirable fraction of population is strong, a real tug-of-war is inevitable. The more intelligent classes have a stouter opposition to jerk against. They need to develop their brawn and their aggressiveness.

The most democratically minded would not insist that the ignorant should rule the educated by sheer right of numbers. The intelligent autocrat would not hold the opposite contention. But that democracy is not a solid gold, political principle is made evident in elections like that just staged in Chicago. Its evils do not condemn its values. Still its evils do exist. Democracy is firmly and probably permanently established in the United States. It now resolves itself into a war between the better and the worse, the intelligent and the ignorant. With no definite authority to justify consider and observe the rights of both, the former class of citizens must get out and work!

Under the label of democracy, the lower level of Chicago has elected all Chicago's mayor. What is the upper level going to do about it?

Even the Papers

EVEN newspaper history, it seems, shall bear the stamp of the "hard times," characteristic of this period.

From Germany comes the announcement that economic circumstances have compelled the famous liberal paper, the Frankfurter Zeitung to dispose of a large portion of its stock to a German dye trust.

This paper has successfully withstood Bismarck's bulldozing and libel suits; it retained its freedom despite efforts of the late Kaiser to force his belligerent policies down its editorial throat; it held firm against war censorship—but at last it has fallen—the victim to the present "economic and political terror." What past German leaders have failed to achieve the present crisis has done.

A German newspaper, commenting on the situation, admits that the dye trust is not quite of the "carnalistic type of our heavy industrialists"—but that there can be noticed "a growing sympathy for those destructive political, and economic ideas, which would have previously been wholly out of place in its columns, and at the same time there has been a departure from those ideas, which here to for had been so warmly supported."

Leisure an End

PSYCHOLOGISTS agree that man must have so much leisure time in order to exist. This has been one of the greatest arguments of labor in the strife for shortened working hours. They have used it for years as a goal to strive for.

Why not use it as a means to an end? The unemployment situation in the United States is almost disastrous and the people of the nation are wondering just how the problem is to be solved. Seven million men and women out of work is no joke to contend with. They are clamoring for work and there is no work for them.

It sounds unreasonable to say that more leisure for the working man would serve as an end to employment for all and ultimate prosperity, but on closer examination it would seem that the theory might be plausible.

Consider a five day working week for all laborers, with an eight hour day. The other two days of the week the worker will have to himself. It is a well known fact that the more time one has to think the more things he will desire to add to his welfare, and his entertainment.

The more wants that the worker develops the more business will be established to supply such wants, thus giving more work to more people. The cycle continues with the more wants realized the more money goes back into the coffers for profit and for laborers.

Thus employment is spread, and there will be a resultant more equalized purchasing power. Ultimately the problem of unemployment would work out its own salvation with no money lost to the government or the industrial firms.

A-Blackeye for Iowa U.

Friends of the State University of Iowa profess deep concern to the effect of the legislature investigation upon the school. Irrespective of the outcome of the inquiry the prestige of the institution will suffer.

Outside the state the press reports are fragmentary, but they carry the most "sensational" of the testimony offered at Des Moines. Little of the evidence in refutation of the surmises of discharged laborers and others gets into print in the larger and more distant papers.

Readers who hastily scan these items will continue to hold to the belief that mismanagement and graft has been rampant at Iowa City. Not even complete refutation of the many irregularities alleged will remove the stigma.

The situation is being widely referred to as a "scandal." Says the Peoria Journal:

"Illinois has suffered from nasty scandals in recent years. It has endured all kinds of criticism out of pardons and paroles. Thus far, however, the university has escaped involvement. For that Illinoisans may be grateful."

Thus is President Jessup, who during his administration elevated the state university to a position of pre-eminence in the field of education, put in a class with Len Small. And members of the state board made companions in the public eye with corrupt payrollers who, at the bidding of some higher-up, turned murderers and gangsters free to ply their deadly traffic.

The refusal of the senate yesterday to appropriate funds for the probe at this time gives hint of the mental reservations of its members regarding the charges brought against the S. U. I. management. Senator Wilson of Polk county and others condemned the hiring of the Burns detective at $25 a day as an insinuation against the ability of state investigators.

"It's a novel procedure to open up the treasure chest of the state in such a fashion," shouted Senator Benson.

Newspaper readers will do well to remain quite open-minded as to the testimony offered by discharged workmen and others. The integrity of the men who have been at the helm at the university and their painstaking scrutiny of the mainfold activities which came under their direction forms the best assurance that much of this evidence will be explained away quite satisfactorily.

Much of that which has been put into the record at the legislative hearing at Des Moines is hearsay, and not a little of the direct testimony so immaterial and irrelevant that it would not be admissible in any court of law. Friends of the university officials, whose integrity has been challenged by the stories of state owned materials used in private construction, are confident that when time comes, official records will disclose that the university was properly reimbursed.

It was not the responsibility of members of the state board of education to report to the teamsters and straw-bosses in the university construction gangs, the procedure employed in these instances to safeguard public property.

Newspaper readers who have plowed through the more extended reviews of the hearing have been surprised by the trivial nature of much of the testimony.

The presumption of the instigator of the investigation in demanding the resignation of President Jessup and the chairman of the important committees of the state board, on the showing made to date, could be exceeded only were the holder of a few shares of stock in the U. S. Steel corporation to insist that its president resign, on the rumor that a ton or two of scrap iron had disappeared from one of the company yards.

Perhaps we should consider William J. Burns as a probable successor to Mr. Jessup. Then we would have someone in charge at Iowa City who would understand that his business was to check up on cement, paint, and electrical wiring and not fritter away his time acquiring million dollar contributions for a medical unit, nor concerning himself with such irrelevant matters as educational processes.

Gas: 1913 and 1931

The 1931 price of domestic gas in Kansas City is higher by 252 per cent than it was in 1913. The United States department of labor is authority for the comparison.

Eighteen years ago a domestic user could buy 5,000 cubic feet of natural gas in Kansas City for an average price of 27 cents a thousand, or a total of $1.35 for the 5,000 cubic feet.

For $1.35 today, the domestic consumer would be entitled to less than 1,100 cubic feet. He must pay an average price of 95 cents a thousand, or $4.74 for 5,000.

If justification ever existed for increasing the price of natural gas from 27 cents to 95 cents, the conditions warranting it, whether potential or real, have been reversed in the intervening 18 years.

High production costs and excessive wastage in transit may have been convincing arguments 12 years or more ago, but those problems have been solved to the profit of the industry and cannot now be used to justify the high prices Kansas City consumers are required to pay.

Gas was obtained from the shallow fields in southeast Kansas in 1913. The pipe line that conveyed it to Kansas City was of poor construction and a large quantity of the gas started to market never reached the consumer.

The supply now is drawn from Oklahoma, Texas and southwest Kansas, through welded pipes that eliminate waste and from fields whose producing life is a matter of generations and possibly centuries. And the price at the well has been reduced from 8 and 10 cents to 2 and 3 cents per 1,000 feet. Pipe line and main pressures have been established on a scientific basis, minimizing the possibility of interruptions to service because of blow-outs.

But in the face of those developments the price for domestic consumers has been allowed to creep up to 95 cents a thousand. This means robbery in the name of public service.

The TREASURE HOUSE of MARTIN HEWS

By E. Phillips Oppenheim

Seventeenth Instalment
(Synopsis of Preceding Instalments)

Martin Hews, a cripple whose lawless methods of collecting art treasures have brought him into conflict with Joseph, the leader of a gang of criminals, retains Major Owston, a soldier of fortune, as his secretary-guard. Joseph's former sweetheart, Rachel, is placed under Hews's protection. He hopes she will reveal the hiding place of Joseph, who, to date, has escaped capture. Whenever he appears, it is always in a clever disguise, and never twice the same one. The girl takes a fancy to Owston, but he has eyes for no one but Beatrice Essiter, Hews's beautiful niece. Beatrice and Owston go to the clubs and restaurants that Joseph is believed to frequent. At one of them Owston is drugged. He regains consciousness the next morning in jail. When he is released, Beatrice has disappeared. A man named Leopold, who accompanied Beatrice and Owston, insists that the latter was very drunk, and that Beatrice, resenting his conduct, has undoubtedly gone to her hotel. He makes inquiries.

"You have, unfortunately, been correctly informed, Major," Mr. Leopold announced, after he had made his inquiries. "This is very unpleasant. I have seen the manager himself. He assures me that Miss Essiter has not returned. What can we do?"

"Well, what do you advise?" I asked him. "Of course, it was chiefly my fault for leaving her alone, but it was you who put her into the taxi and sent her back here."

"We must consider the situation," Mr. Leopold declared. "We are equally involved in this matter—no, I will not say equally. I offered my escort to the young lady, and she refused it. My share of the blame is small, but still it was I who invited you to the club. We must put our heads together. Miss Essiter is, I am sure, a charming lady, and she undoubtedly has a large number of friends. Perhaps she has gone to one of them."

"Quite possible," I admitted. "Under those circumstances, I suggest that we give the young lady a chance before we create a scandal. Give her, at any rate, until this evening. If, at the end of that time, nothing has been heard of her, I will see that Scotland Yard is informed, and you can go down and interview her uncle."

"You don't think we ought to let the police know at once?" I asked dubiously.

"I should give her another hour or two," Mr. Leopold urged.

I rose reluctantly. I hated to leave Mr. Leopold, but I felt that I had reached almost the limit of my endurance.

"Very good, sir," I told him. "I'll leave the matter in your hands, and I'll wait for a time before I go down to Breezley. Can I see you anywhere this evening, in case you have any news?"

"Certainly, my lad," was the cordial reply. "I'm sorry about last night, but it can't be helped. Don't worry about it too much. I'll see you tonight with pleasure. Where am I dining now? Can't remember. Anyway, will you come to my rooms—Number 27a, Berkeley street—and have a cocktail with me while I change for dinner. Half past eight, eh? How does that do?"

"Very well indeed, thank you," I assured him. "I'll be there."

I walked dejectedly towards the exit. Half-way there, however, Mr. Leopold recalled me. He was fumbling in the pocket of his overcoat.

"I say, you didn't notice a letter lying on the floor on my chair when I went to the office, did you?" he asked.

"I am afraid I'm not in the humor to notice anything this morning," I regretted.

He frowned. His little black eyes looked slantwise into mine.

"Nothing important, I hope?" He shook his head, apparently satisfied.

"It was just a message. I never carry important papers about with me. Sorry to have called you back. I'll see you later in my rooms. Half past eight tonight, eh?"

"If I get back from Breezley alive," I replied dolefully.

I sent an urgent note to Inspector Ebor, abandoning with some reluctance my first intention of going down to Scotland Yard myself. Then I summoned up all my courage and started off for Breezley.

I shivered as I drew near the huge edifice, shivered as the front door opened without any summons from me, and Minchin bade me enter. The house was incredibly still. He led me to the lift.

"The master is waiting for you, sir," he announced, and I was sure that there was a note of malicious pleasure in his tone. I advanced as bravely as I could into the little circle of light thrown from Martin Hews's red lamp—the only illumination in the room.

"Sit down," he ordered me briefly, without looking up.

I obeyed. My employer was bending over the table, studying what seemed to me to be a chart. It was at least a quarter of an hour before he spoke to me, and then he did so without lifting his eyes from his task.

"So you are good for nothing except drayman's work, after all, Owston?" he said.

"It seems so, sir," I admitted.

"You were sent to the west end of London to establish yourself there for a certain purpose. On practically the first night, you stepped glibly into a trap. You cannot now enter a single night-club in London. Your name is being posted as an undesirable person. You will need courage to show yourself whenever people of the world into which I wish you to penetrate are gathered together. The cards of invitation for the functions I wanted you to attend with my niece have been, or will be, of course, withdrawn. You have destroyed your whole utility to me in a single evening."

"That is all quite true, sir," I acknowledged, "but it is not the full extent of my folly. You have probably received my message, and you know that a much more serious thing has happened through my blundering. Your niece has disappeared."

"Disappeared?" he repeated. "Explain yourself, if you please. Your message was too vague."

"Miss Essiter went with me to the Blue Skies Night Club at the invitation of a Mr. Leopold, brother of Lady Bonofar. When we arrived there, I was asked to visit the secretary's room, where I was fool enough to allow myself to be drugged, and woke up this morning in a police cell. This morning I went to Claridge's, and I learned that Miss Essiter had not returned. I have seen Leopold, and he declares that he put her into a taxi cab at the club a few minutes after I had left. Nevertheless, no one seems to have seen her since. This afternoon I received one of those polite communications from Joseph. Here it is."

I handed to him the note found in my letter-box a few minutes before I had left. He read it through slowly: "A fair exchange, my dear Major. I have altered my mind. I have decided that I will not raze Breezley to the ground to snatch away your prisoner. Rachel is, after all, a little creature of the slums and alleys, but Beatrice—Ah, well, it would not be for you, dear clumsy enemy, to appreciate how wonderful a woman she is. I think that I shall rest content." Martin Hews read, with a devilish smile, the words that had brought sobs to my throat.

"You are a wonderful escort, are you not?" he went on, with a sneer. "Perhaps you had better explain to me once more, in as few words as possible, exactly what happened."

Hews nodded resignedly and held up his hand, as soon as I mentioned Leopold's name.

"You needn't tell me what happened," he groaned. "You remembered, of course, that you were a British officer, and that, instead of brain, you had been endowed with the muscles of an ox. Leopold is, I presume, in the hospital. Another police court case tomorrow, eh?"

"Not at all," I assured him coolly. "I tried my best to make friends with Mr. Leopold."

He looked at me sharply. I could see that he was suspending judgment.

"If you will read the account of my appearance before the magistrate," I went on, "you will see that I contradicted nothing that Mr. Leopold said. I allowed him to pay my fine. I did not appeal. I only went so far as to deny that I was drunk, and that, I take it, any man in my position would have said as a matter of course, whether he was or wasn't."

"But when you went to Leopold in the lounge of Claridge's—surely you played the muscular hero then?"

"I apologized for the trouble I had given him, I thanked him for having seen Miss Essiter to the taxi cab, I confided to him the story of her disappearance. I accepted his suggestion that we should do nothing about it for some hours, and I agreed to leave it to him to make the subsequent inquiries. I am to see him again at half past eight this evening in his rooms."

"Very slowly indeed a wrinkle stole into Martin Hews's protruding forehead."

"Is it possible," he murmured incredulously, "that you are not quite a fool? Why did you adopt that attitude?"

"Frankly," I replied, "because I felt perfectly certain that the obvious one would be a mistake. I preferred Mr. Leopold to believe that I accepted his story and did not connect him with Miss Essiter's disappearance."

I thought that, by keeping in touch with him, I might learn something."

"And you are seeing him again tonight?"

"That is so, sir. We shook hands at parting, and while he went, at my suggestion, to the hotel office to make inquiries for himself, I stole a letter from his overcoat pocket."

"You are beginning to interest me curiously," my employer confided, with a little curl of the lips. "I cannot make up my mind whether it is a development on your part, or whether you are indeed a singular mixture on your part, or whether you are indeed a singular mixture of imbecility and common sense. Show me the letter."

I laid it upon the writing-table. It consisted of two lines only, written upon perfectly plain paper. Martin Hews read out:

"29 21 20 18 37 18 8 1 1 19 5."

"A communication in cipher!" he murmured. "Well, have you been able to make anything of it, Major?"

"I am afraid not, sir. I thought you might be able to do that."

"You flatter me," was the cynical rejoinder. "Can't you see that this is not a code that lends itself to any of the ordinary methods of deciphering? Did Leopold seem disturbed at having lost it?"

"He certainly did."

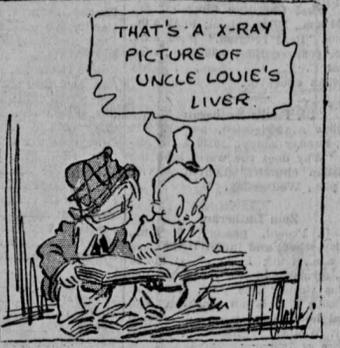

"Well, there's only one thing for you to do," he pointed out, handing it back to me. "Leopold must have the key. You are seeing him this evening. Possess yourself of it."

"Thank you for the idea, sir," I replied. "I will see what I can do."

He chuckled almost like a human being.

"Upon my word, Major, you are improving," he declared, "you certainly

Behind The Scenes IN HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—Many Hollywood stars go in for collecting; and their hobbies range from first editions to Indian war bonnets.

Billie Dove, of all people, has a collection of dressed fleas. They come from Mexico and are varnished and dressed by hand. One of the most unusual pieces is a wedding scene pasted in a half walnut shell. There are the bride, groom, minister, bridesmaids and audience.

Other unusual collections are Gary Cooper's Indian war bonnets, Greta Garbo's album of every picture she ever posed for and Clive Brook's crystal goblets, many of which date back 300 years.

More conventional are the first edition libraries of Al Green and Jean Hersholt, Louise Fazenda's pewter, John Barrymore's and Harold Lloyd's autographs (Harold being limited to sport celebrities), Hobart Bosworth's marine equipment, Richard Dix's pipes (he has 50), Jack Mullan's military relics and Betty Compton's $70,000 worth of Dresden china.

And, of course, Lew Cody's unsurpassed list of phone numbers.

URULELE PLAYERS CRACK UNDER STRAIN

Cliff Edwards has been put into convalescent following one of those "let's see you make a sentence with this word" parties. His suggestion was: "Where is Jake? I haven't 'Clamaron' for a couple of weeks."

GARBO-GILBERT

One who is very close to M.G.M. policies tells me it is now practically certain that Jack Gilbert will be seen opposite Greta Garbo in "The Rise and Fall of Susan Lennox."

The man in the story is being shaped up to fit Jack, and the studio figures that the combination of the two stars with King Vidor as director could not fail to produce a smash hit.

Two of the big successes made by Jack and Greta in the silent days were "Flesh and the Devil" and a version of "The Green Hat."

In case you've forgotten, David Graham Phillips wrote "The Rise and Fall of Susan Lennox."

RETURNS TO GAME

One of the old-time film executives has emerged from retirement and is building another fortune producing and distributing cheaply made Western pictures. He is John R. He had been in retirement for 10 years before his recent activities.

Today at 60 he has exchanges in key cities, and is making quickie Westerns pay in a large way.

Packing House

By Bonar Wood

OLD JAKE, perched on the top rail of a loading chute, sneezed. Beneath us the last lone sheep was trotting to join the band ahead, its feet adding to the yellow haze of dust which, drifting upward, settled on the rails and penetrated our nostrils like a strong dose of snuff. We both sneezed.

It was two-thirty of a July afternoon in Iowa. Heat waves bounced from the iron rails of the switch track and seared my eyes. I looked away. In front of us the dull red walls of the packing house, four stories tall, shambled down to the mere one story of the scale house. Everything, even the buildings, sprawled and panted in the heat.

Jake suggested we move into some shade and away from the prickly dust; the hay fever seemed to be coming on again, he said. I dropped the six feet to the ground and turned to see Jake climb carefully down. He looked especially ludicrous with his short bow legs stretched apart and his arms akimbo as he gradually descended. It made me think of a spider climbing down the strands of his web.

We sauntered down the chute and into one of the feeding pens. The dust here was inches deep and arose in little puffs as we walked along, or rather as I walked along; Jake shuffled his feet and drove furrows in the grey powder. The heat here was almost intolerable, and we both mopped our streaming faces.

One corner and part of a side of the pen were roofed over, and back in this cool recess, out of the glare, a watering tank stood flowing fresh cold water. I sat on the edge of an overturned feed bunk and perched my feet on the edge of the trough. Here was comfort.

Jake had been a foreman over at the packing plant for thirty years, and when they tried to retire him on full salary he objected so strenuously on "Bein' an object of charity," as he phrased it, that they invented the position of "unloading inspector" and Jake met every sheep car and saw it properly cared for. He coupled this position with the unofficial one of "head yarn spinner," and a lot had happened to him—if you believed all you heard, anyway.

Jake entered the shed and sat down beside me. He then passed his hand to his mouth and rid himself of his old supply of "Climax," while with his free hand he fumbled in a hip pocket for his fresh plug. Finding it, he carefully bit off a satisfactory piece and returned the slab to his hip. All this was done in one motion and with a precision that almost made it a ritual. He gave one try at the corner post for range and then shifted the wad to his cheek.

"Well, son," he began. "The plant's got all the sheep it can use today; I guess we can rest a spell. That second carload we handled this afternoon sure was bad ones—acted like a flock of guinea hens. Next to them, I guess, they is about the world's dumbest animal. Or maybe the sheep come was skinning each sheep right after they was stuck; he stood right next to the 'killer' and got in the first licks after they had been killed. Lots of times they don't die right away and it gets to be real pathetic.

"This Tony was a good workman and made more money than anyone except the 'sticker.' A 'sticker' is the man who slaughters, and he draws more money because his job is pretty mean and pretty bad on the nerves. It gets lots of 'em finally. I've heard 'em say it got so they would imagine they were killin' human beings whistle for me if I hadn't finished eatin' yet, or I'd stall around the house until he'd come along.

"He was a sort of mild, easy-goin' little fellow, but he never seemed to be really happy. One day he told me his wife made home a regular hell for him. They had about seven kids, he said, and his wife always made him get up and get breakfast for the whole family. That wasn't all. She expected him to do the dinner dishes every night—after he'd been workin' all day at the plant. She used to go visitin' or go to a show with some of the neighbor women and waste hard earned money. Every dime he made he had to give her on pay day or never a minute's rest would he get. Why even the neighbors used to tell him she was too much of a scold and that she needed a few bats alongside the head to bring her to time.

"That probably would have been the best thing too," Jake continued, "women need a steadyin' and a guidin' hand to slap them down every so often.

"The part that was worst though I didn't hear from Tony. It came from other places. The men in the locker room, before work and during lunch, talked about it some. Joe Vince, the sticker that worked next to Tony, was keepin' some company with Mrs. Tony, so they said. She used to go over to Dreamland, that dance hall on thirty-second street, and meet Joe there. Accordin' to the stories they never used to stay at the dance very long.

"Joe should of knowed some-thin', or anyways suspected every-thing wasn't just right, because almost everyone else seemed to know. Generally it's the husband that's the last to find out though.

"At the plant everything wasn't so good neither. The boys used to pick at Tony all of the time—most of them in a good natured manner and kinda joshin' like; but this one smart aleck, Joe, thought Tony was dumb because he wouldn't, or couldn't, answer back to his wise-cracks. Tony was always made the goat of everything Joe thought funny. He was something of a practical joker too, and nothin' was funnier to him than to hide Tony's dinner pail or playfully turn on him a hose that was used for washing away the blood and dirt.

"All this Tony took in good naturedly and even used to grin in sort of a forced way. There was one thing that seemed to get un-

Dust Will Remember

As rivers one day flow into the sea,

And iron drifts slowly into powdered rust,

So blood will turn to water, and the crust

Of earth that covers all of you and me

Be plowed with wintry storms until the tree

Is torn from it, and pounded by the gust

Together with our bones. And that new dust

Will breathe again our brief mortality.

We shall be even wind and dust and dew;

For men may speak of rain, but we shall know

That thunder hurls our tears, or that the blue

And steady stream at evening is the flow

Of blood in living veins. And whisperings through first; I dunno. They both are terrible exasperatin' most all the time.

"You wouldn't think to look at 'em that there was any harm in a million, but, believe me, I'd rather tackle Texas long-horns any day. It ain't that sheep are bad—they're just so damned crazy and simple they near drive a man insane. I guess they do sometimes. I've heard tell time and again of men herding sheep and being out alone miles and miles from human beings and never seeing anybody for weeks at a time, goin' plumb loco and gettin' right down on their hands and knees amongst the woolies, eating grass and goin' 'baa.' It may be true and it may not; but son, I'll tell you something that is a fact.

"There used to be an Eyetalian, Tony Spumone, who worked over in the plant as a butcher. His job after so long. Some just can't stand it at all. The plant generally works one man at sticking about one week and then shifts him somewhere else. To be a 'killer' all of the time a man would have to be minus a heart and have damn few brains.

"Tony had been workin' on number one position, the slaughtering job, for about two weeks before all of this I'm tellin' about happened. One of the regular men had been laid up, and he was helpin' out by doin' a double shift. He was moved to number two job, first skinner, on one Monday morning. But I guess I'm gettin' a little ahead of my story.

"Tony lived down in 'wop town,' somewhere on seventy-second street, and he used to pass my house going to work. Every now and then I used to walk with him and finally it got to be a regular habit; he even used to wait and

Prof. Grace Hebard, First Woman Awarded B. S.
Degree at Iowa, Now Writer.

The first woman to receive a B.S. degree from the university was Prof. Grace Raymond Hebard, author of nine books, and head of the department of political economy and sociology, at the University of Wyoming.

Undaunted by criticism for attempting what seemed exceedingly masculine, Prof. Hebard majored in engineering, receiving her B.S. degree from the university in 1882 and her M.A. degree in 1885. During the January before her graduation, she was offered a position as draftsman in the United States surveyor general's office at Cheyenne, Wyo. Her duties would have been to take the field notes surveyors had made in locating sections, towns, and ranges and to make maps from them computing the land acreage. Although, she was offered $1,200 a year for six hours work a day, her mother insisted that she graduate first, even though it meant giving up the offer.

The offer, however, was kept open for Professor Hebard until after her graduation. Realizing that she was occupying a man's position Professor Hebard was ambitious and determined enough to retain her position until the office force was finally decreased, she being among the last to leave.

After leaving the surveyor general's office, she was for a short time deputy state engineer at the capitol in Cheyenne. Later she went to Laramie, Wyo., as trustee of the new state university, and has been there since 1891, occupying various positions. She was a member of the board of trustees for 13 years, secretary of the board for a time, and librarian for 26 years. Since March, 1891, she has been a professor at the University of Wyoming. At present, she is head of the department of political science and sociology. When she first came to the university there were less than 50 students in daily attendance. Today there are over three times that many in the graduating class.

Miss Hebard has written many books following her research into the history of Wyoming. One of her latest books is "Washakie," an account of Indian resistance of the covered wagon and Union Pacific railroad invasion of their territory. In this book Prof. Hebard in addition to giving a sketch of the life of the old chief, Washakie, tells much of the early history of the Wyoming, the Oregon, and Bozeman trails. She also deals with Indian treaties and the habits and general characteristics of the tribes of that section.

Other books which Prof. Hebard has written are "The History and Government of Wyoming," "The Pathbreakers from River to Ocean," "The Bozeman Trail: Historical Accounts of the Blazing of the Overland Routes into the Northwest," "War Service, University of Wyoming," "Civics of Wyoming," "The First Woman Jury," "Marking the Oregon Trail and Historic Places," "Sacaajawea: Guide and Interpreter of the Lewis and Clark Expedition."

In honor of her father and mother, the Congregational church of Iowa, where Mr. Hebard was at one time minister, dedicated a stained glass window to their memory.

Search for "Unknown" Graduates Continues; Inouye Located in Japan

With the records department of the alumni office still on the trail for "lost" or "unknown" alumni, for whom they have no addresses, many of these persons are being found again.

Nor does the search confine itself to the United States. Tokuzo Inouye, '12, has been among the "unknown." A letter was sent to his father in Japan asking for information, after all other sources were exhausted.

In reply the office received a letter from Mr. Inouye himself, saying "... In this opportunity, I should like to express my sincere thanks for your endeavor of tracing my address and the same time my hearty apology for my obscured address caused you much trouble."

Mr. Inouye's address is care of Mitsui Bishi Trading company, 1 Matsuura Cho, Sasebo, Japan.

Work of Sharp Now Exhibited

Former Student Attracts Much Attention in Art Circles

The works of John R. Sharp, a promising young painter from Eldon, are attracting much attention among art circles.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sharp of Eldon and has attended the university.

Sharp painted three pictures last summer which were exhibited by the Iowa Artists club in October, using equipment belonging to E. B. Rowan of the Cedar Rapids Little Art gallery, with whom he was associated at the time. These three were, "Portrait of My Brother," a still life called "Tulips and Lilacs," and an Iowa landscape.

These early efforts attracted attention, and Sharp was offered the opportunity to study under Jaroslav Brozil, head of the Municipal Art gallery of Davenport.

He then went to New York, where study was arranged for him by Carol Sax, of New York City, formerly an instructor of art at the University of Kentucky, and once of Ottumwa, who had heard of young Sharp's work.

Recent paintings are now on exhibit at Iowa State college and next month will be exhibited in the Cedar Rapids Little gallery.

Now they are saying with pride in Eldon, "Johnny Sharp always could draw pretty good."

Sterba Reads Informal Paper to Radio Men

Ernest J. Sterba, B.E.'20, recently related the development of "Directive antennae systems" by the Bell Telephone laboratories, Inc., Deal, N.J., in an informal paper before the Philadelphia section of the institution of radio engineers. The paper will be published in full technical aspect in the proceedings of the institute.

Mr. Sterba joined the technical staff of the Bell Telephone laboratories in the fall of 1920. Since 1922 he has been engaged in development of radio antennae, especially short wave transmitting antennae of the directive types.

The directive antennae, coupled with other necessary transmitting and receiving apparatus developed by the other sections of the research department are now in operation in transoceanic and ship-to-shore service.

Mr. Sterba's mailing address is box 122, Deal, N.J.

Engineering Graduates Practice in 44 States

Engineering graduates of the University of Iowa now are practicing their profession in 44 states and 6 foreign countries, it is revealed by the compilation of the annual alumni directory.

Cassius C. Van Ardsol of Clarkston, Wash., who received the civil engineering degree in 1876, is the oldest living graduate whose address is known.

Ruth Gallaher Tells of Early University Days

In 1859 Board Excluded "Females" From Halls of Learning

By BONAR WOOD

According to Ruth A. Gallaher, '08, '18, and holder of a Ph.D. degree at Iowa, the campus accommodations and student facilities were not always so available as in recent years.

In the year 1859 the Board of Trustees voted to exclude "females" from the halls of learning. Later this was amended to permit women to enter the normal department. An act adopted the following December by the Board of Education, however, provided that both sexes be admitted on equal terms to all departments of the university.

Student qualifications were that each must be 16 years of age and that the head of each department was the authority as to admissions to his classes. A certificate of proficiency in any 10 classes, based on a final examination by a committee, entitled a student to a B.S. Degree. Completion of 14 classes under the same terms gave the degree of B.A., while 18 led to the degree of Master of Science.

Four literary societies were founded in the university by 1868. They were Zeta-gathian, Erodelphian, Hesperian, and Irving Institute. Facilities for library and reference work were very limited. The library was open for the issue of books from 1:00 to 2:00 p. m. five days a week. Apparently it was not available as a study room, much less a place for dates and conferences.

In the year 1869, the first student newspaper, The University Reporter, made its debut. It was published monthly and its terms were one dollar a year "invariably in advance." A glance at the advertisements reveals some characteristics of student life. Motion picture notices are entirely lacking, photographers wares are stressed, and the most striking ad is "Hoop Skirt Factory, Hoop Skirts Made to Order."

At this time the president of Iowa received the magnificent salary of $2,000 a year. Professors received $1,000 a year and fees from their departments. These fees were $2.00 a term for each course in which the student was enrolled, $5.00 in the normal department, and $6.00 in the preparatory department.

For sociable diversion the students held monthly sociables in the Chapel where they enjoyed "playing, promenading, conversation, etc." Persons who have had the impression that the university in its youth was a godless institution may be interested to know that a student prayer-meeting was held every Tuesday evening. Attendance at daily chapel exercises was compulsory, although the room was frequently so cold that it was suggested that "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" was the only appropriate hymn. Moreover, students were "expected" to attend some church on the Sabbath. Because of the limited number of students it was possible, for faculty members to observe those who attended "prayer meetin'" and those who did not. The offenders, in the next day's classes, were subjected to minute scrutiny and received more than their share of questions on the lesson. It was considered the height of diplomacy to attend the professor's own church and sit as near his pew as possible.

General rhetorical, held in the chapel, were a feature of college life at this time. These seem to have been popular, but the college paper found fault with the conduct of the audience, asserting that "the practice of stamping on the floor is a habit that may be appropriate at a political pow-wow, yet we think entirely unbecoming the dignity of students in the university chapel." There was also objection to the practice of sewing, knitting, and reading books and magazines during the programs.

Book Reviews

Edited by
MARGARET UNTERKIRCHER

"Many a man lives a burden to the earth:
but a good book is the precious life blood of a master spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life."
Milton's Areopagitica.

Hysterical Realism

THIS OUR EXILE by DAVID BURNHAM; Scribners', $2.50. Reviewed by ROBERT MORRIS.

Perhaps it is unreasonable to expect more from a first novel than the unique idea that "as a thing in itself, life is futile." The present effort fulfills expectations no more. A rhapsodical narrative of a modern, wealthy, would-be sophisticated American family, its 423 pages abound in small talk, insignificant actions, contemporary superficiality. With this rather threadbare stock in trade the author traffics at random, and finally the book ends, according to formula, in frustration.

What Mr. Burnham is trying to do is to depict a certain class of contemporary Americans in their rather inept struggle for "happiness." But "happiness" fails them at every turn, and so the mother comes to despair and her three sons are convinced that drunkenness and hysteria offer the best escape from a world too real for their frail beings to endure. One of them, the narrator, almost slips into a love affair with a creature somewhat like a romantic heroine but he is spared that, and he returns to the desert of disillusionment. When the father's illness, the unifying motif of the story, is at last crowned by death, the show of puppets must go on simply to remind the hasty reader, if any there be, that life is frustration playing out against the destiny of decay, disease and death.

There is potential pathos in this, something pitiful in these unrealized characters and their dance Macabre, something which a German poet has called "the twilight of humanity." But the idea has probably had an insufficient period of gestation, and the work turns out to be a pretty good exercise in the imitation of contemporary realists.

The choice of the first person point of view is unfortunate because of its limitations and because it lends itself to the illusion of insincerity. Suggesting the affected gossip of the tea table, the style is more appropriate for a minor accident to a lady's lap dog than the tragedy it is trying to portray. The fictional treatment of the imminence of death and the illusion of life is a rather rash attempt, for Thomas Mann in "The Magic Mountain" did that beyond hope of emulation and even imitation.

To say that this work is promising is to praise it with no hint of condemnation. The author, a young Princeton graduate, has surely read widely in contemporary fiction, and there is no question but that he shows skill in the autobiographical passages. Nervous intensity, a distinguishing quality of contemporary life and letters, is all on his side. But this, his first effort, can hardly be called more than a tour de force.

End Well, All Well

THE LIGHT THAT NEVER WAS by KATHERINE FULLERTON GEROULD; Scribners', $2.00. Reviewed by HARRIET I. MAHNKE.

Mrs. Gerould has coupled two of the most saving graces, humor, and the ability not to take life too seriously, in this new novel. In these lie most of the book's charm. Lydia was troubled, deeply troubled, but she still was able to laugh, often at herself, and she had sense enough not to bemoan her fate to the complete oblivion of those around her.

An orphan since childhood, she made her home with an aunt, possessed of a daughter Susan. The two girls were always at sword-points. When Lydia learned that Susan was about to return from the playgrounds of France she determined to get away immediately.

In New York she saw Tod. One swift look that pierced them both made introductions unnecessary. They knew that they were absolutely suited to each other.

Three days in Berwick followed, days of "wind, and stars—monkey-business," terminated by Lydia's receipt of a telegram from her fiancé. Ensuing events upon her return home caused her to break her engagement to John, principally because she refused to say that she did not love Tod. She and Tod had agreed that their love was not the "marrying" kind, but she could not satisfactorily explain this to John.

The story is carried swiftly, completely to a happy ending through excellent use of dialogue, a means of advancing plot lately almost entirely disregarded by novelists.

Legible type, fine paper, a well laid out page, and good printing contribute their merits to the readability of the story.

A Princess Explains

THE EDUCATION OF A PRINCESS by MARIE, GRAND DUCHESS OF RUSSIA; Viking, $3.50. Reviewed by MARGARET UNTERKIRCHER.

Her baptismal carriage was drawn by six white horses and accompanied by mounted Hussars. During the war she organized and directed a hospital behind the front lines where supplies became so short all operations had to be performed barehanded. The change is symbolic of the "education" of this Russian princess.

Niece of the emperor, cousin of the last tsar, she grew up in seclusion to face problems that unbalance even well-prepared persons. Meekness, humility, obedience, and piety were the objectives in her education. One is moved to pity by the narrowness of it all, by the utter lack of preparation for the responsibilities royalty had to assume.

With her heart always for her country, the Grand Duchess nevertheless came to see its weaknesses. The majority of the aristocracy had no conception of the fermenting rebellion; the outbreaks during the Russo-Japanese war carried no warning. This was the path paved for the destruction of the old order.

The book is not a defence, but an explanation, of the old aristocracy. We see the ruling class as men and women with human limitations. That their limitations led to misery and bloodshed is to be pitied, not condemned. There have been many books on the tyranny of the old order. There have been few to show us what lay back of the tyranny.

Her life story and that of her immediate family is told frankly, with infinite detail, yet with dignity and restraint. Numerous photographs of the royal family in intimate and formal poses enhance the interest in what is already an absorbing book.

Book Notes

In "A Roving Commission," which Charles Scribner's Sons have just published, Winston Churchill tells about the inscription Mark Twain wrote in a set of his works Twain gave him when he visited this country at the age of 26. Twain's inscription was: "To do good is noble; to teach others to do good is nobler, and no trouble."

Hart Crane won the Helen Haire Levinson Poetry Prize for 1930 with "The Bridge," which was published in book form by Horace Liveright.

Toward Democracy

And he was equal there, dust with the dust of Stonewall Jackson and the unknown slaves and the soldiers and Ann Rutledge. Though we, the living, wage our petty wars of inequality above their heads, the dead are peers of the dead and the grim processes work no less surely under the marble obelisk of the rich than under the wooden cross of the pauper. All differences end when the tongue of poet and fool alike are stilled and the loveliest face day ever saw is as hideous a skull as that of the mongoloid. Over the countless inequalities that life demands, inequalities inevitably a part of our existence, there is this one fact that in the end the powers that be exact the same penalty from us all. It would seem that life is worth just so much, for we each pay the same when the accounting comes. Political and social power varies; health, wealth, intelligence, even love, is given to men in unequal lots for which nature as well as man is responsible, but these are ephemeral things of a most ephemeral existence.

AGAIN my mind drifts to the school room of long ago with its hacked desks and restless occupants. The foreign boy died not long ago. I saw the three lines of small type in the obituary column and vaguely remembered him. The superintendent's daughter is home from her first divorce suffering a "breakdown." And I who have ridden the crested wave of fortune so far know that my day is coming. Do we not often confuse differences with inequalities, we children of earth? Very different one from the other she has made us, yet in the two things that matter most she treats all her children alike. All are helpless before her, all live for a while and then for each life—prince, vagabond, saint, or blackguard—she exacts the same penalty. Before Chance and Death all men are equal, and all the brilliance or virtue that human lives can accomplish, all the degradation or cruelty to which it can sink, alter not in the slightest the whimsy of the first nor the inevitability of the second. Knowing that, how foolish are our little precedences, however innate; how foolish our clambering the one above the other by strength or blood or brain, for we are children playing our games during recess, and the teacher will come soon to hurry each to his own place under the loam and teach there "that all men are created equal."
