Behind the News

Swedish Star Shows Preference for Sun Solitude, Sardines

By HUBBARD KEAVY
(Copyright 1931, by Associated Press)
HOLLYWOOD, May 15 (AP)—Her intimates call her "G. G." her co-workers call her a sphinx. Her mother calls her Greta Gustavson. To the world she is Greta Garbo.

She likes sun, solitude and sardines. She looks like a bronze goddess in a bathing suit. But there are no photographs of her in beach wear. She was brought to Hollywood, an unknown at $100 a week. She was a "publicity girl" at Metro-Goldwyn Mayer and spent most of her time posing for stunt pictures. The negatives have been destroyed.

She answers fan mail—but only Greta Garbo when it bears a Swedish postmark. The tone of most of the letters from admirers in her native country is: "Why do you always play bad women on the screen? Swedish girls are not like that." She replied that she is sorry, but that she has nothing to say about the kind of roles she plays.

She prefers the company of German-speaking people. Her English is good and her accent slight, but she can't help making "j" sound like "y." She has well-shaped feet, about size 5-1/2, but her shoes are one and one-half to two sizes larger. She wants to avoid unshapely feet.

She plays tennis like a man and has a lot of fun doing it. Her back yard is surrounded by a high wall so she can take sun baths.

She isn't as much of a recluse as she is believed to be. Greta has been to Agua Caliente, the Mexican border playground, and she has spent several week ends at a nearby mountain resort.

In the last few months she has become clothes-conscious and is paying more attention to her dress.

She seldom converses with anyone connected with the making of her pictures, even her director.

Her favorite expression is "Oh, father knows best."

She sings badly and likes to imitate other stars.

Holdup Men Rob Bank at Ely of $2,891

Bandit Trio's Car Has License Numbers Stolen Here

(Special to The Daily Iowan)
ELY, May 15—Swooping $2,891 from the till of the Ely Trust and Savings bank at closing time yesterday, three men made good their escape after holding up Norbert Janko, bookkeeper.

The car was trailed by Joe Binko of Ely south and west to the U. S. highway 151 where officials believed the car turned north to Cedar Rapids. The license number on the car was 52-4315 which had been stolen from a car belonging to Elmer Anelaux, 1111 E. Bloomington street, Iowa City, last Saturday night according to Chief of Police Frank Smith.

Pose as Salesmen
The two men entered the bank shortly before closing time and posed as bond salesmen to the bookkeeper, but after discussing the bond business a few minutes suddenly drew 45 automatics.

Taking Janko to a rear room they bound his hands and feet with wire and then rifled the cash drawer. A third man remained in the coupe as a lookout.

Worming his way to the front after the robbers drove away. Janko set off the alarm with his teeth. Binko, answering the alarm, immediately took up the pursuit of the bandits' car.

Local Officers Search
Sheriff Don McComas of Johnson county was notified and left for Ely with H. T. McNabb following the Red Ball road. Chief of Police Smith with Officers Wesley Sedivec and Herbert Beranek took the Solon road to Ely.

Five carloads of officers were dispatched by Sheriff Joseph A. Petrus of Linn county to patrol highways, and the police of Swisher were called out.

Janko said one of the men had a gruff voice while the other presented a smooth appearance and wore a light gray overcoat. The car was said to have white wheels. Ely is 20 miles north of Iowa City.

Turner Gives Woodmansee Life Sentence

Governor Dispells Death Verdict Upheld by Hammill

DES MOINES, May 15 (AP)—The shadow of death that hung over Dr. Fred A. Woodmansee for more than a year was dispelled today by Governor Dan Turner, who committed his sentence to life imprisonment.

Twice the supreme court upheld the sentence passed after his conviction for murdering F. W. Knap, named in the courts as Woodmansee's "best friend," and twice his attorney, Harry Grund, carried it to the governor's office.

Hammill Refuses
Governor John Hammill on Jan. 14 of this year, as one of his last official acts, refused to grant executive clemency. Failure there brought a second appeal to the supreme court for a rehearing which was denied May 7. Delay while awaiting the court's decision blocked carrying out of the execution on the original date, April 17, and the case was brought to Governor Dan Turner early this week.

It was his opinion, said his statement accompanying announcement of the commutation, that "after carefully reviewing evidence in the record, both majority and minority opinions of the supreme court, and taking into consideration all facts and evidence available outside the court records of the case and of a mitigating character," that "executive clemency should be exercised."

Seven Affirm Verdict
Seven justices of the supreme court had affirmed the verdict and sentence of the Polk county trial court, the other two members of the bench dissenting.

Knap was fatally injured here Dec. 29, 1923. A bloody section of pipe wrapped in his overcoat was found on the floor. Woodmansee was behind a door and testimony was introduced into the trial record showing that no other person was in the building nor could any have entered or left between the time Knap's cries were heard on the street below and arrival of police.

Died Jan. 10, 1930
The aged truck manufacturer died Jan. 10, 1930 from his wounds. He was said to have named Woodmansee as his assailant.

Brought to trial, Woodmansee was found guilty Jan. 24, 1930, and sentenced to hang. He was placed in the death cell at Ft. Madison penitentiary, where years before he had served as prison dentist.

Knap and Woodmansee had been friends for many years and testimony was introduced to show that once Knap obtained the dentist's parole after the latter had been sentenced for forgery.

Attorney Grund, after the governor's action had been announced issued a statement commending Turner's action. He said that six of the jurors who sat during the trial had requested that the penalty be lightened.

Jury Fails to Decide Case of $600 Loan
Whether or not Evelyn E. Snider owes J. J. Farrell $600, as he claims, was still unanswered, late last night, by a jury which had not yet agreed upon a verdict.

Farrell claims that he loaned, at different times, sums of $200 and $400 to Evelyn E. Snider. She denies that she received any such loans from him. The case came before the court yesterday morning, and was given to the jury at noon.

Will Publish New Charter for Workmen

Radio Carries Address in Italian, French, German

VATICAN CITY, May 15 (AP)—Pope Pius XI promised the Catholic world a new charter of labor to elevate the workman's status in a radio address today commemorating the 40th anniversary of Pope Leo Thirteenth's labor encyclical "rerum novarum."

This new charter will be issued in the form of a long encyclical entitled "Quadragesimo Anno" and will be published in about a week. Broadcasts Speech

Broadcasting for the first time in the modern tongues of Italian, French and German successively, the pontiff said the economic world must be reorganized to achieve justice for the working man and laid great stress on three words which he said would express the meaning of the entire document—"prayer, action, sacrifice."

From the papal throne and under a great canopy in the courtyard of San Damaso, the pope addressed directly 10,000 Catholic workers who stood bareheaded in a scene which was brilliant with the banners of many nations, the colors of papal uniform and the somberness of ecclesiastical garb. He made the longest address since he was elected nine years ago, lasting an hour and 20 minutes.

Outlines Charter
The church's new labor charter, which the pontiff had foreseen, was outlined in a short encyclical letter published today and was distributed to the pilgrims before his address. It was later read on the radio by Monsignor Francis J. Spellman of Whitman, Mass.

In it the Pope condemned extremists and said socialism and communism were incompatible with the church's principles.

He said there must be an overhauling of the economic system by "bringing it back to the requirements of social justice so as to insure more equitable distribution of the united proceeds of capital and labor."

Cause of Disorder
The disordered world today, the pontiff said, was due to men fixing their eyes on earthly goods without heed of God and of things eternal.

The Pope asserted his own and the church's right to intervene in social problems such as are at issue in a world where there is too great injustice in the appointment of the world's goods.

He pleaded for better relations between classes and the trade groups and declared that the workers' wages must be adequate to meet all proper needs of the working man and his family.

Only One Remedy
In a word, he added, the only real remedy is a return to the same principle of Christian social philosophy.

The pontiff began speaking at 5:28 p.m. (10:28 a.m. C.S.T.) He prefaced his address with a few words in Italian greeting the workers who had come from all over the world to attend the anniversary. He then repeated the greeting in French and German and launched into the main body of his address.

Michael J. Grant, a policeman, was testifying in denial of his wife's divorce charge that he was "consistently drunk."

"Liquor," he said, "has never passed my lips."

"I never saw a policeman who'd refuse a drink," the judge commented. "The divorce is granted."

Police last night were holding one man and searching for his companion after a truck in which the two had been driving had crashed into two cars, one four miles north of Iowa City, the other on S. Dubuque street.

The truck, a Dodge, tore the bumper and smashed a fender on the car of Frank Corsetto, 420 First avenue West, Cedar Rapids, while Corsetto was driving on U.S. 161. Corsetto pursued the truck into Iowa City.

On S. Dubuque street, between Iowa avenue and Washington, the truck crashed into a Chrysler coupe driven by Clarence R. Parizek, 430 N. Dodge, smashing the rear end. The driver jumped from his machine and escaped by running down the alley onto Linn street.

Turner Ends Work, Signs 4 Measures

DES MOINES May 15 (AP)—Governor Dan Turner today concluded disposal of legislation passed by the forty-fourth general assembly by signing four measures and returning three to the secretary of state without his approval.

Among the bills disapproved was that prohibiting the catching of bull heads less than eight and a half inches long. The governor said the bill would "deprive the Iowa boy of one of his recreations and was not needed from a conservation standpoint."

The other bills rejected would have changed the method of computing license fees on motor vehicles, and would have set $25 as the nominal value of non-par stock.

Measures approved restrict the location of junior colleges to districts of more than 20,000 population, provide for sentencing habitual liquor law violators, permit the transfer of earnings of municipal plants, and reduce the rate of interest on public deposits.

Tributes Paid to Dead Actor

David Belasco's Death Brings Scores of Messages

NEW YORK, May 15 (AP)—Messages of grief and tribute flowed today into the studio of David Belasco from legions of players whose careers he helped to mold.

They were not made public by relatives of the little grey master of stagecraft, whose death yesterday at 76 quenched the flame which had burned bright on Broadway for 51 years. The messages—more than a thousand of them—were read by kin and laid away with other mementos of a lifetime rich without precedent in associations with the theater.

But expressions of sorrow were there, associates knew, from scores upon scores of players famous on stage and screen whose feet David Belasco had helped to place in the path of greatness.

Funeral plans were unchanged today save in the substitution of William Morris for Al Jolson, who is ill, as one of the pallbearers. Others at the funeral Sunday in the central synagogue will include Mayor James J. Walker, Daniel Frohman, Lee Shubert, George M. Cohen, Frank Gilmore, Edwin C. Carpenter, Mitchell Erlanger, A. O. Brown and Edmund Coblenz.

Interment will be at Linden Hill cemetery on Long Island in the Belasco mausoleum beside the body of Mrs. Belasco, who died six years ago, and Augusta, a daughter who died in her youth and beside whose casket her father always kept a candle burning "because she feared the dark."

The heart of the Majestic Refrigerator, the motor and pump, is hermetically sealed at the factory... sealed against dust and dirt, against rust and corrosion, against amateur tampering, against expensive repair bills. Sealed within is the continuous bath of oil which need never be changed. The few simple parts of hardest steel run on a film of oil, wear very slowly and should last a lifetime.

Having used highest quality materials, shaped and assembled to rigid standards of inspection, Majestic unhesitatingly backs this refrigerator with a 3-year guarantee.

...and if I "was" a millionaire I'd buy out all the seats in the Englert theatre for the three days starting Sunday, while "The Millionaire" is playing. Then I'd seek out all the discontented movie fans who have tired of sex, gangs, sophistication and marital difficulties in pictures and say: "Here, go see George Arliss in this picture. Take the family. You'll have a swell time." ... I like it better than Disraeli" or "Old English." I like Arliss more in this. The former two were artistic triumphs. "The Millionaire" is a triumph for simplicity and for human movies... Don't miss "The Millionaire." ... Not for millions. ENGLERT THEATRE—SUNDAY.

New $60,000 Structure to Replace Old Power Plant

September 1 will see the new $60,000 mechanical engineering laboratories building completed at Washington and Madison streets, from which the old power plant has been almost completely razed to make way for the new structure.

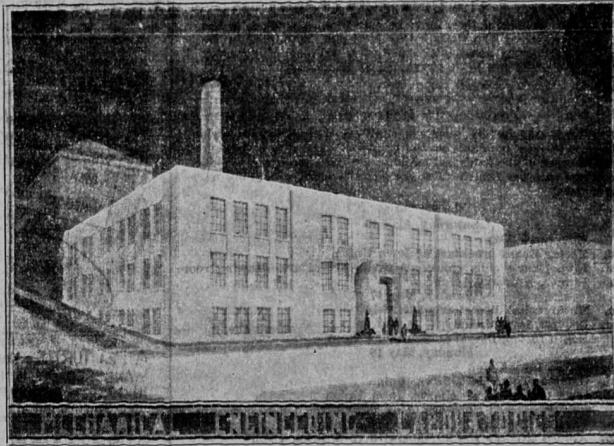

This newest addition to the group of engineering buildings will consist of a basement and two floors, each 50 by 150 feet. It will be of steel frame construction, with building tile walls and partitions, concrete floors, and a stone veneer outside wall to harmonize architecturally with the adjoining engineering building.

Chimney Stand

The reinforced concrete chimney of the old power plant will be left standing to serve as a ventilating shaft for the laboratories to be housed in the new structure, and wherever possible, parts of the basement walls of the old plant will be incorporated in this building.

The basement floor will be taken up by the power, internal combustion, foundry, and metal treating laboratories. Steam power production methods laboratories, tool and instrument rooms, and recitation and display rooms will be housed on

Dean of the Theater

DAVID BELASCO, who became a play producer when the theater in America was in its infancy, now is dead. Critics have been stingy with their praise of Belasco in regards to his imagination, his intelligence, and any particular gift that he may have about the way of the theater, but all of them are quite willing to admit that he is a most unusual man.

He has kept pace, or rather has set the pace, with the progress of the theater and died on the job. His 'Tonight or Never' is current on Broadway.

His death comes as a fulfillment of a prophecy he made after his seventy-first birthday when he declared, "I shall retire when I am carried feet-first out of the theater."

Belasco was born in San Francisco and his early stage career began in the rough mining towns of the west. Broadway only came to know him as an elderly white-haired man—kindly but subject to quick fits of temper that vanished as quickly as they appeared.

There was no phase of the theater that he did not know and his first public appearances date back to the days when foot lights were candles and when the theater was a tent. All of the positions that come to those who succeed in the theatrical world, call boy, bill poster, scene painter, actor, author and producer, he filled in turn.

The list of actresses and actors he lifted from obscurity to stardom is a "who's who" of the world theaters. All of them loved and respected him. He earned and cherished the title of "The Wizard" because of the uncanny stage settings he contrived. He spared no costs in being original and different in these settings. It is said that the settings for "Mima" cost him $200,000.

Unlike most actors and producers, this dean of the theater, was neither a smoker nor drinker. He had two loves besides the theater. He enjoyed a good boxing match and he loved to ride for miles and miles behind the back of a mule chauffeur.

But even these were neglected when there was a play to rehearse.

Two Books a Year

THE American people actually buy an average of less than two books per year per person, schools books included—so discovered the American Booksellers' association, which recently met in convention.

It is a striking indictment that in all these United States the reading average should be so low.

It is not because books are expensive—the recent plan of the publishers to put out dollar volumes of really good works, blasts such an argument. It is not the fault of the book stores, who are already in a perilous economical position. They have become semi-public institutions. Even in small towns they are expected to carry a large assortment of books, which are of special interest or benefit to their communities. Many thousands of new books are published every year and public interest in literature is a highly perishable product.

Yes, the book stores do their part. The question as to why Americans with their efficient school systems and numerous institutions for higher learning, do not read more can have only one answer—they do not know the pleasure and profit that is to be found within book covers.

Missourians Still Look at Airplanes

J. P. Moore of the Liberal News says he used to be ashamed to drive his old model T down the street, but not so any more. When folks hear him coming now, they think there is an airplane and nearly all look up, and this gives him a chance to slip past without being noticed.

Mr. Tinley

(From The Des Moines Register) The last service of Emmet Tinley, as attorney for the state board of education in the legislative investigation of the state university was quite characteristic of his lifetime of active professional work.

The unstinting effort, the intellectual poise, the temperamental moderation, the gentlemanliness that marked his performance of that legal function for the state impressed everybody. It is certain that he had the respect and even the affection of nearly all who may have been opposed to him or who may have disagreed with him.

Mr. Tinley, as a lawyer, was a product of the old system of office apprenticeship. Like many another lawyer in our history, so trained, he was one of the state's successes. Despite his own living demonstration of the fact that it is the material in a man which determines how much any kind of training may benefit him, he fully comprehended the value of schooling. It is The Register's understanding that to the extremely unostentatious generosity of Emmet Tinley was due the college training of more than a few young men.

While it would be absurd to sum up so long and useful a career as his in one labor, though it be his last, there was a phase of Emmet Tinley's employment to represent the board of education in the recent investigation that might well be any man's crown.

When to various eminent members of his profession from various parts of the state was put the question of selecting the man, having in mind his heat and passion of the controversy and the need of the highest qualities of mind and heart, all said "Emmet Tinley."

Tomorrow's University

Scholarship First

Ten future M. D.'s All in a line; One flunked anatomy— And then there were nine!

FOR the way of the medical student is hard, and beset with many barriers. To him various qualifications for entering and passing liberal arts are mere preliminaries for the gauntlet he is later to run.

Once he has successfully emerged from "pre" work in liberal arts with a C average he must maintain the medical equivalent—1.5—while averting the pitfalls which sift out each crop of prospective doctors. The college has a reputation for dishing out so many flunks they are as common as appendix removals.

And it is all for good reason. Aspirants for the seven years labor to wed the medical profession are enhanced in number by the promised dowry. They have multiplied almost with the rapidity of bacilli in recent years. So crowded has the field become that U. S. students have not only been unable to get training in their home states but have been shunted to European schools from an overcrowded waiting list.

That helps explain why the University of Iowa portals resound with the knock of so many easterners.

Nativity, finances, and scholarship have successfully been applied as criterions in the competition. The last named, and most recent, standard is of course most readily justified. It means that by the best measurement it can devise the university is assuring the public that stress is primarily upon quality in training for this important profession.

Financial discrimination is, of course, justified only by expediency for meeting partial cost of the education as an investment by the student beyond that of seven years from his youth.

And regional selection, while presumably an effort to spend Iowa tax money on Iowa students first, is less desirable than the qualitative choice. Moreover, it leaves grounds for suspecting a race prejudice against Jewish students, who very often have talent which merits consideration ahead of ability to pay or racial or regional origin. And there is always the possibility of acquiring residence in Iowa City.

If any individual choice between two possible medical students had only the element of whether the men were from Iowa or not, decision would be easy. Unfortunately, though, situations are often more complex. Where possible, Iowa students should be favored against comparable students from elsewhere—but there is no substitute for the Biblical adage that "By their fruits shall ye know them." The primary consideration in evaluating a potential doctor probably is the ability he displays. Scholarship must continue to count most.

Frohwein Urges Improvements for Lathrop School District

School Board Asks Council for Assistance

Majority of Residents in Section Wanted School

Immediate improvements by the city for the new Henry Lathrop school was urged in an address to the city council last night by George H. Frohwein, school board president.

A letter in behalf of the school board requesting prompt action was presented to the council. The council voted to have the city engineer draw up plans and specifications for the paving of West Benton street leading out to the new school.

The stormy history of the Lathrop school, now under construction, was reviewed by Mr. Frohwein. "The board was never eager to build," he said, "but such tremendous pressure was put on the board by a substantial majority of the people in the neighborhood that as a consequence went ahead with plans. Ground has already been broken and we might as well face the fact that a new school will be built."

Alderman George Katzenmeyer of the second ward stood firmly on the ground that unless a half or more of the property owners affected by the improvement signed a petition for it, he would oppose the proposed paving.

"It is a case of necessity," Alderman-at-large C. Rollin Sherck argued.

Paint City Hall

Other improvements approved by the council were the painting of the city hall and police station, the extension of water mains on Governor and Church streets and the installation of three hydrants, new gutter and water sports on the city hall, and painting of center line markings on U. S. highways 161 and 32, Solon road, and Lone Tree roads.

Signs came in for considerable attention. The Red Lantern cafe was given permission to put a sign across and 12 feet over the sidewalk, the bond of the Safety Cab company for its sign was approved, the bonds of James Bosten and Beals brothers were returned because the signs had been taken down.

Stop, Go Signs

The question of purchasing more stop and go signs was laid on the table until the next meeting, June 5. Suggestions were numerous as to possible location of the new signs.

Claret permit was granted the Pearson Drug company at 202 Linn street and a permit to operate a miniature golf course to the Harter Miniature company.

Right to install gasoline tanks at College street and Gilbert street and on South Clinton street was granted the Skelly Oil company. The Mid-Continent Oil company was granted the right to put in a gasoline tank at Linn and College streets.

Ordinance Passed

One ordinance was passed and another was amended. Alderman Sherck's proposal that all bulky articles must be compressed and demolished to take as little space as possible to be discarded in the city dump was written into the ordinance book.

The world "hospital" and a coma was inserted in paragraph seven, section 191 of ordinance 1354 with unanimous approval of the council.

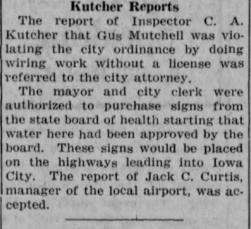

A letter from President James A. Parden of the Iowa City Savings bank on center street parking was read and placed on file. A communication from J. Braverman asked his name to be removed from the petition presented at the last council session opposing center street parking.

Board Continues Work to Get Location of Hospital

A report of the committee working to secure the location of the federal rehabilitation veterans' hospital here will be given by Chairman E. A. Chappell at the weekly luncheon of the chamber of commerce Monday noon.

A recent announcement given out by the hospitalization board of the veterans bureau announced that the building would be located within a 50-mile radius of Ames. In spite of this, the local committee has continued its work.

An American Legion committee composed of Judge Harold D. Evans, Dr. A. W. Bennett and Post Commander Delmar Sample is cooperating with the chamber of commerce workers.

Also M. J. McGovern and Vern R. Miller, representing the Disabled Veterans association, are working on the project.

Approximately $1,275,000 will be expended for hospitalization in Iowa by the national government.

River Swim, Canoe Races Draw Entries

River swim and canoe race on Iowa river Tuesday at 4:15 p.m. are attracting more entries daily. That there is interest in the events is manifest by the pairs of canoeists who are to be seen on the river trying to find out whether long strokes or short quick ones get them along the fastest.

Several have been taking their swimming workouts in the river to accustom themselves to the cool water. Glen Berhens, a freshman who is giving Bill McCulley and Boyd Liddle something to think about this year, and Bill Ross have been seen stroking their way from the island to the boathouse. Liddle too has been fortifying himself against strong opposition.

Entries for the open and interfraternity canoe races close today with "Dad" E. G. Schroeder. These races will be from the park bridge to the Iowa avenue bridge, while the swim will begin at the island and finish at Iowa avenue.

The Dolphin swimming fraternity is promoting the river swim, and is offering a statue for the winner. Ten place medals are to be given out in the splashing event.

Harry Haskins and Eugene Ashton are the latest swimming entries. Forest Allison will accompany Ashton as life guard in the swim.

Hawks Drop Seventh Straight; Wolverines Win Mound Duel, 2-0

Kiegler Stops Iowa; Stempel Allows 8 Hits

Old Gold Flash Double Play; Nelson Aids on Defense

Michigan handed Iowa her seventh consecutive conference defeat yesterday afternoon, 2 to 0. Kiegler, Wolverine right-hander, was largely responsible for the Old Gold setback. He held the Vogelmen helpless in the pinches and fanned five Iowa hitters. Stempel made a name for himself in that he was the first Iowa hurler to go the route against a Big Ten foe.

Coach Ray Fisher's men touched Stempel for eight singles, but did not score an earned run. Nelson came to his battery mate's rescue in great shape in the third inning. Eastman opened the frame with a clean single and raced to second on Kraecht's one base hit. "Nelly" whipped the ball to Riegert to catch Eastman off second and a moment later easily threw out Kraecht on an attempted steal. He had previously thrown out Daniels in the second inning. Nelson's all-round performance yesterday was commendable.

Mowry Snacks Double

Iowa's defeat can be summed up by that trite phrase, "They failed to hit in the pinches." Koser walked with two out in the opening stanza and Captain Mowry came through with a hard drive to the entrance in left field, the ground rules allowing the runners but two bases. Nelson then rallied out to Kraecht. Kiegler allowed the Vogelmen just one more hit up to the sixth inning. Reedquist cracked a double to left with two out in the sixth but Riegert skied to Daniels to snap the rally.

Kiegler Finishes Strong

Porter walked with two away in the seventh and Kenny got a lift on a smash to Superko, but Koser went out on a roller to the Wolverine third baseman. Kiegler retired the Old Gold in order in the ninth, striking out one pinch hitter and forcing a second to fly out to center.

Both of the Michigan tallies were unearned. Diffley walked in the fourth, advanced to second on Daniels' top to Stempel, and scored on Eastman's single. Kraecht followed with a second safety but Kiegler popped to Nelson to end the inning. Kenny's error, a free ticket to Hudson, and Diffley's one bagger netted the Fishermen a marker in the fifth.

Flash Double Killing

The Iowa infield turned in the first double lay of the season on the local diamond in the fourth frame. Superko opened with a single, Braendle popped out, and Tompkins smashed a grounder to Kenny, who threw to Riegert to force Superko and Mike's throw beat Tompkins to first.

Michigan's infield was the best to perform here this year. Kraecht and Daniels had nine chances between them without a bobbie. Hudson made 13 putouts at first. Frigo made two nice running catches in right field after replacing Carry in the third. Kenny, usually a dependable player, was guilty of two miscues yesterday.

60,000 Will Spur Horses With Cheers

Twenty Grand Favored Over Mate for Rich Stake

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 15 (AP)—Dominated by the east's aristocrats of the turf a field of 15 three year olds was named today for the fifty-seventh running of the Kentucky derby.

With one or two possible exceptions, subject to withdrawal, they will bound out of the starting gate tomorrow afternoon, send the pulses of perhaps 60,000 spectators soaring and fight it out in a race that most everyone expects to wind up in a stretch duel between Mrs. Payne Whitney's Twenty Grand and Albert C. Bostwick's Mate.

He opened his performance by running a dead heat with Bill Hartsock of the locals for honors in the century dash, then continued to capture titles in both high and broad jumps and the 220 yard low hurdles while being content with second place in the 220 yard dash and third in the shot put.

U. High Wins Track Meet From Lyons

Defeat Clinton Outfit by Eleven Point Margin

University high tracksters scored slams in the discus throw and 440 yard dash to pile up enough points to stave off a desperate rush by Lyons high of Clinton in the closing events of their dual meet here yesterday, and defeated the Clinton outfit, 69 to 58.

Perkins Wins Shot Put

In the shot put, Perkins of University high reversed last week's decision on Holm of Lyons, his 41 ft. 7 in. being a scant three inches too good for the Clinton man. Hold beat Perkins by an almost identical margin at the district meet last Saturday.

Coroner's Jury Unleaded

LOGAN, (AP)—A coroner's jury was to reconvene tomorrow to resume its inquiry into the death of C. Earl Welly of Omaha in an automobile accident Wednesday north of Missouri Valley. The jury met Thursday afternoon and adjourned without reaching a decision.

Sportively Speaking

By Bill Rudedge

The pick of the nation's two year olds will thunder over the Churchill Downs course this afternoon in the renewal of the historic Kentucky derby. The event ranks as one of the outstanding sport events of the year.

Turf writers note in their stories a different type of crowd thronging the derby this year. Instead of the ritzy, carefree, and easy-spending crowd that usually assembles to lend color and picturesque to the occurrence—gives way this year to an audience of grandstand outlookers.

Heartened by his speedy performance in the time trials Wednesday, westerners have rallied around Pittsburgher, Cornelius Vanderbilt's entry, Equipoise, still stands as one of the favorites. Mate and Twenty Grand are choices to finish in the money.

Both the Chicago White Sox and the Cubs were sent down the road to defeat yesterday. The former skidded into the loss column for punk playing. The Sox can blame no one but themselves for dropping the game. The box score reads like one attached to the account of a college contest—eight errors by the Donie Bush men.

Speaking of college contests, the Hawkeyes put up an admirable battle against the Wolverines. They should whip their Badger enemies in the game here Monday afternoon. Pitching has been gaining in consistency, and shakiness is coming out of the infield.

Just how far Iowa will go in the Big Ten outdoor carnival at Evanston can be fairly well judged by its showing in the triangular meet at Madison this afternoon.

The team's forte lies in the field events—the hammer, discus, shot put, javelin events. Points garnered in these departments linked up with scattered tallies in the track events should lift the squad to a place high up in the point standings.

EXTRA

EVANSTON, Ill., May 15 (AP)—Northwestern's golfers trounced Iowa, 15 1/2 to 2 1/2, in their matches here today. Charles Wilson, No. 2 on the Purple team, scored a 37-38 for a 75 and the best round.

The Wrist Mark

by J. S. Fletcher

Synopsis of Preceding Installments

Col. Engleden, formerly governor of Southmoor prison is murdered. Setton Engleden, a nephew, with the aid of his law clerk, learns that during the colonel's time at Southmoor two prisoners, Snelling and Hardie, escaped. The theory is that the colonel had found the escaped convicts and that they killed him. A former prison warden, Millwaters, engaged to aid in the investigation, is murdered. Malison, superintendent of police, arrests two soldiers who admit having robbed the colonel's body, but deny any knowledge of the murder. Meanwhile, a description of the escaped convicts is obtained from Capt. Shoreham, of Southmoor. Snelling had a birth mark on his right wrist. Engleden recalls that Sanderson, on whose estate the colonel's body was found, wears a steel bracelet on his right wrist. The question arises—Is Sanderson Snelling? Johnson thinks he is, and that his butler, Hewitt, is Hardie. Mal. Anstie, of the Home Office, says he had a letter from the colonel saying that he had located all the persons concerned in the prison escape. When an attempt is made to prove the identity of Sanderson and his butler, it is found that they have fled. Sanderson's chauffeur, John Dales, tells of taking his employer and another man on a mysterious drive the night of the murder. A townsman, Francis Silverstein, tells Johnson that Sanderson, with Sadler the town jeweler, and several others, was perpetrating a financial swindle, and suggests that the colonel was murdered because he threatened to expose the fraud. He is also convinced that a farmer named Beckett, who had known Sanderson very well, is one of the former prison wardens through whose treachery the two convicts escaped. Captain Shoreham sees the man and identifies him as Settle, the ex-warden. Johnson sets out for Starick Priory Settle's farm. He waits there until dark, and then sees the shadows of two men on a window-shade.

Twenty-Second Instalment

Johnson's story continued: "It gave me something of a surprise to see the shadows, because, up to that moment, I had felt convinced that the house was empty—empty, at any rate, up to the time at which Settle re-entered it from his marketing expedition. And Settle had certainly not brought anybody with him! I had a full view of him as he drove up, and he was alone. But there the shadows were—shadows of two men, both tall, full-grown, moving about. Shadows of two men—and as I watched, the shadows became three.

"So there were three men in that place—and two of them must have been there all the time I had been watching the house from the edge of the ravine. Had they seen me? I thought not—I had executed a lunge as soon as I had come in sight of the farmstead and its surroundings.

"Who were they?—that was another matter. Probably Sanderson and Hewitt. Whoever they were, the situation was full of dangers for me. If I fell into their hands, I should doubtless share the fate of Colonel Engleden and of Millwaters, and get a bullet through me or a knock on the head and a grave in one of the crevices of the moor. All the same, I was going to know whom those three shadows belonged.

"It was now dark, as dark as ever it would be that night, but the darkness was not going to last long. During my period of waiting in the hotel at Harlington, I had ascertained that the moon would be about half past ten o'clock. It was now ten minutes past; the moon would very soon show its face above the ridge behind me. And it was just then at the full and in that clear atmosphere its light would be quite sufficient to make moving objects easily recognizable. Now, for anything I knew to the contrary, there might be a fourth man in this party, and he might even be watching me from one of the front windows. And the space before the house was a clear one, with no corner—if I crossed it, anybody with sharp eyes, keeping guard to be done—I had got to know who the men were, and what they were after.

"The bank of the narrow stream on which I was standing was thickly fringed with alders; under their protecting shade I crept further away to my right, and then, to my great satisfaction, saw that there was a side window to the room in which the shadows were moving. And by the way the light streamed through it on a fringe of trees and bushes outside I judged that that window was unoccupied. If I could worm my way round the outbuildings and get to where I could see in at that window...

"I had to go a long way round, keeping first in the cover of the alders, then behind a hedge that shut off an orchard from the farmstead, then behind a long black wall that lay in shade, and finally through a succession of sheds, stables, and the like. But at last I was close to the north-west angle of the house, and from a black nook in the deep shadow of the old tower I was able to see the side window. And as I had previously concluded it had neither blind nor curtain.

"The problem now was how to approach it. I solved that by dropping on hands and knees in the grass and advancing, always in the shadows, in that highly uncomfortable fashion until I had reached the wall of the house. Thence I transferred myself to the belt of bushes which faced the window. The cover was thick there, and when I stood up and looked cautiously through a screen of laurel, I found that I could see right into the room in which I had watched their shadows cross and re-cross: I was, indeed, so advantageously placed that I could see pretty well all over it. And now there was but one man in it, and he was the last man in the world I had expected to see at that moment.

"Sadler! There were more reasons than one for the surprise I felt at seeing Sadler in that place. By that time I knew Sadler well enough by sight. I had seen him two or three times on the magistrates' bench, and often at the town at Barrowsburgh; twice I had some conversation with him on the subject of Colonel Engleden's disappearance—a topic on which he was inclined to be self-condemnatory and almost lachrymose, it being his conviction that, if he hadn't advised Colonel Engleden to see Wrasby Abbey by moonlight, that gallant gentleman would not have met his sad fate. But wherever I had seen Sadler, on the bench in his jeweler's shop, or in street or market-place he had always been dressed in sober black, with a top hat—root—he was one of those men who affect a precise and trim style of attire and looked as if everything about him from his broad-brimmed hat to the square toes of his shoes was carefully calculated to impress everybody with this probity and propriety.

"And now here he was before me in a checked tuxedo suit—Norfolk jacket and knickerbockers—with zany turn-downs to his stockings, a light-colored necktie, a rakish cap. I saw his purpose as soon as I set eyes on him—Sadler, wherever he was going, meant to be taken for a tourist, a pedestrian. On a chair at the side of the room into which I was looking lay a big, old-fashioned portmanteau, open; on another, close by, lay a knapsack. He was treating certain articles from portmanteau to knapsack. Clearly he was going to carry the knapsack on his shoulders; indeed, as soon as he had packed it to his liking, he adjusted it on his back and tried the straps. And, while he busied himself in that fashion, I glanced more particularly round the room.

"It was so big that the further parts of it were lost in gloom. But in the center was a table, laid for supper—I could see what was on it; a big piece of cold beef at one end; a ham at the other; there was half a cheese, bread, and butter, and a bottle of pickled onions. I was near enough to see that knives and forks were laid for three persons; evidently Sadler was one, Settle a second. But who was the third? Whoever he might turn out to be, I was already certain of this—these three men were going to clear out, probably as soon as they had supped.

"A door opened in the rear of the room and Settle came into view. Sadler said something to him; Settle jerked a thumb towards the door by which he had just entered. And a moment later another man appeared, and I had my second surprise of the evening. The third man was Bratten, the Barrowsburgh draper, and Sadler's fellow magistrate—and also fellow-director of the Northern and Imperial Mutual Benefit Society.

"I was familiar enough with Bratten's appearance, though I had never held any conversation with him. He was a big, rather hulking, florid-faced fellow, not at all the sort of man that you would expect to find handling drapery goods. But, as a matter of fact, he owned the principal drapery establishment in Barrowsburgh, and had a branch of it in Harlington. I remembered that last fact as I looked at him now, for an idea suddenly flashed into my mind—considering all that I now knew, and all that I was rapidly learning, was Bratten the man whom Sanderson fetched from Harlington on the night of Colonel Engleden's murder, the man spoken by Oates, but whose features Oates never saw. It was likely—anyway, his presence in this place, with Settle and Sadler, proved conclusively, to me, at all events, that Bratten had some share in the doings of which, now, I was convinced Sadler was a mainspring.

"Like Sadler, Bratten was dressed in what you might call tourist fashion: like Sadler, he had a knapsack. He was carrying it in his hand when he came into the room, and he laid it down by Sadler's. Clearly, each man had some pedestrian venture in prospect—my notion was that they meant to make their way on foot across the moors and hills towards some seaport, probably to Liverpool. That I was determined to circumvent was, but I had never been conducting my brains as to the best way of doing so when, with Settle, they sat down to supper.

"And now luck came my way. The three men had scarcely begun eating when Sadler, turning and pointing to the window, made some remark which caused Settle to rise and approach it. I feared that he was about to draw down the blind and close the shutters and thus cut me off from all further observation; instead, he threw open the window, top and bottom, and returned to his seat at the table with some jest at Sadler's liking for fresh air.

"I could hear the rattle of knives and forks now, but I meant to hear more than that. And once more dropping on hands and knees I made my way out of the house wall, and so came close beneath the window, and there, getting my head as close to the window-sill as I dared, tried to catch whatever was said within the room."

Behind the Scenes in Hollywood

By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD, Cal. — Reports of preview scouts who saw "A Free Soul" have wrecked whatever hopes Lionel Barrymore may have had of going back to his directing.

Electrified by the praise given the veteran actor's performance, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer already has assigned him to the lead in "Guilty Hands," a mystery picture to be written and directed by Bayard Veiller. The author of "The Trial" of Mary Dugan now is completing the script and it will be in production before long.

Previous to "A Free Soul," Barrymore hadn't acted since "The Mysterious Island." He directed several pictures, the best known being Lawrence Tibbett's "Rogue Song." It took the grand role of the attorney in Adela Rogers Heyland's novel to persuade him to come out of his retirement.

It develops that Veiller is not making his debut as a director in the new film. Back in 1921, he was head of the old Metro scenario department, and later became a director. The reason he quit pictures at that time is unchronicled.

QUITE AN ORDER

Another proof of the importance of punctuation is brought in by Lew Cody, recently, while breaking in his new coupe, Hollywood's favorite man about town saw the following sign on a farmer's gatepost.

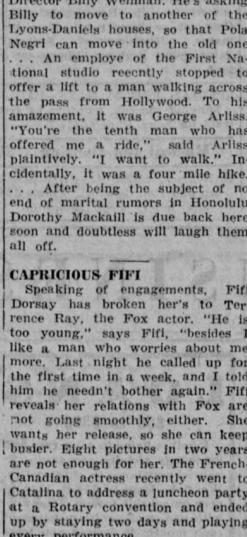

"Eggs blow your horn."

LATEST GOSSIP

The recent appearances of Jack Gilbert and Joan Bennett together have set the tongues alight on the boulevard a-wagging. Likewise, the interest Kathryn Crawford and

CAPRICIOUS FIFI

Speaking of engagements, Fifi Dorsay has broken her to Torrence Ray, the Fox actor. "He is too young," says Fifi, "besides I like a man who worries about me more. Last night he called up for the first time in a week, and I told him he needn't bother again." Fifi reveals her relations with Fox are not going smoothly, either. She wants her release, so she can keep busier. Eight pictures in two years are not enough for her. The French-Canadian actress recently went to Catalina to address a luncheon party at a Rotary convention and ended up by staying two days and playing every performance.

PHIL HOLMES CAST

Early reports that Norman Foster was to appear in "No One Man" seem to have been premature. In his stead will be Phillips Holmes, a young actor who has made good in a sensational way during the last year.

Carole Lombard, of course, plays the love-troubled heroine of Rupert Hughes' novel. She is another player who has found 1931 the luckiest
