Men Behind the News

Financier is "Kindly and Democratic" to Neighbors.

(Editor's note: This story on J. P. Morgan is another in a series dealing with the little known side of prominent persons.)

By CLARK M. SCHOOLEY
(Copyright, 1931, Associated Press)

GLENN COVIL, N. Y., May 16 (AP)—In the world of finance J. P. Morgan is known as a master mind, but to this little town on the north shore of Long Island, near where he lives some of the time, he's just a neighbor, kindly and democratic.

Pipe in mouth, he is often seen riding on the front seat of his automobile with the chauffeur. On Sundays he passes the collection box at St. John's Episcopal church, nesting among the quiet hills of Locust Valley.

Skilled Yachtsman

Citizens know he is a world figure and worth millions, but they like him primarily because he is a yachtsman who can handle a sailboat skillfully and lives a simple, friendly life. They like his smile and say the wrinkles at the corners of his eyes come "from laughing with the world—not at it."

Mr. Morgan has two yachts, both of which contain features originated by him. Frequently he decides personally to renovate them and has them in paint-spotted, white duck trousers, and a bespattered white cap, he scrapes and paints, unnoted by the citizenry.

He has a magnificent flower garden on his estate in which he spends much of his time when he's home. Last year he was "riddled pink" when his violets, iris, tulips and lilies won nine prizes at the International flower show. He was pleased too, when his Guernsey herd of cattle won ribbons at the Nassau county fair.

Attends Church

Twenty years ago Mr. Morgan helped organize St. John's church. When he's home he never misses a vestry service or Sunday worship and for many years has been senior warden of the parish.

Rare paneling, duplicates of those executed by the late Sir Robert Lorimer in the chapel of Thistle, St. Giles cathedral, Edinburgh, Scotland, are in the church edifice, gifts of the Morgans.

Christmas is a big occasion in the life of J. P. He doesn't like "Pierpont" Morgan. He is a "regular" grandfather to his 16 grandchildren who assemble with their parents in the mansion.

His summers are generally spent abroad, while his New York ones enjoy vacations at camp Elliot Bacon, which he maintains solely for them on the boundary line of Maine and Canada.

Dislikes Publicity

Mr. Morgan dislikes personal publicity, as hundreds of newspaper reporters and photographers can testify. On his frequent trips to and from Europe the sum total of his interviews is: "I have nothing to say."

He is dismayed when reporters swarm about him on ship board and retreats to his cabin. On one occasion, however, a number of years ago, while returning from France, he broke precedent by granting an interview to a reporter for the Associated Press.

Tactful With Reporters

The reporter had prepared a number of questions to ask him about post war financial affairs in Europe. Before he could say anything, scores of fellow scribes had surrounded the financier, hurling all sorts of queries at him. Mr. Morgan fled to his cabin.

But the A. P. man was persistent. He wrote a polite note to Mr. Morgan and set down the questions he did not have an opportunity to present. The note was slipped under the cabin door. Shortly, to the astonishment of the reporter, he was invited to see him. Most of the questions were answered readily and the reporter came away with real news.

The people hereabouts are awaiting completion of "Morgan Memorial Park." Built in memory of his wife, Mr. Morgan is spending almost a million dollars to make it one of the best in the country.

Pre-Season View of Spring Bonnets Given by Firemen

Spring has arrived at the local fire station. A few days ago truck number two was given a general cleaning and overhauling. And now, although the open season on straw hats doesn't officially begin until Wednesday, each member of the fire department has a new fire bonnet.

They are made of bakelite and cannot be broken by dropping them or hitting them with anything. George Bircomb of the city engineer's office has lettered each one in black with the title or number of the respective firemen.

Autogyro Stops at Iowa City Airport; Seven Others Here

A large Pitcairn autogyro plane produced excitement yesterday at the Iowa City airport as it settled almost vertically from the sky by the use of its large propeller on the upper wing. Three scheduled single motor planes, two trimotors, the Register and Tribune's plane Good News II, and Chris Hahan of Cedar Rapids were the other planes stopping.

The autogyro, the same type as was first used for carrying air passengers, was on its way from Willow Grove, Pa., to Omaha, Neb., when Mr. Miller is the pilot.

Three passengers rode in the first trimotor, which arrived at 9 a.m. piloted by Homer Munson. Don Preston was copilot accompanied by Stewardess Hasele. Six passengers were in the trimotor reaching Iowa City at 6:45 p.m. Robert Cochrane was the pilot accompanied by Copilot Ball and Stewardess Peterman.

Jack Knight, one of the oldest pilots on this line of the Boeing air transport company, was the pilot of a single engine plane stopping at 11 a.m. David Behneke arrived at 2:30 a.m. in a single engine plane, and Robert Cochrane was through at 4:20 a.m. with another single motor.

Half of Property in Chicago Faces Sale for Tax Payments

CHICAGO, May 16 (AP)—More than half of the property in Chicago today faced possible sale for taxes and bankers and legislators sought means to save the city from a financial crisis.

Although tax paying was thrown more than a year behind through a new system of assessment, the final day for the payment of $276,000,000 for 1929 taxes found $176,000,000 unpaid. On this delinquent charge, property owners must pay one per cent a month until accounts are balanced, and at the end of three months, if still delinquent, the realty will be listed for tax sale.

One of the principal remedial steps contemplated is the consolidation of taxing bodies in Cook county, where now there are approximately 30 such bodies presided over by a three-man board of assessors and a similar board of review. Under the projected amendment township assessors would be abolished and one assessor would head the taxing body.

Law Agents Still Pursue Bank Bandits

Believe Ely Holdup Men May Still Hide in Vicinity

Tips as to the whereabouts of the three bank bandits who robbed the Ely Trust and Savings bank Thursday afternoon were being traced by the sheriffs of Johnson and Linn counties and state agents yesterday.

The general theory prevails that the bandits have left the state. But law agents continued their activities in pursuit of the holdup men in the belief that they might be hiding in the vicinity for several days before trying to make a getaway.

$2,680 Taken

The holdup was the twenty-first in Iowa since June 1, 1930. The loot was officially reported as $2,680, netting each bandit about $866.

The description of the robbers sent out by Frank Warner, secretary of the Iowa Bankers association gave the first holdup man as "age, about 42 to 43 years old; height, five feet 10 inches; weight, 175 or 180; fair complexion; smooth shaven; wore gray suit and a gray hat pulled well down over his eyes."

Escaped in Coupe

"The second bandit is reported to have been similar in build to the first, but no further description is available. A third bandit remained in the car outside the bank, but his description is unavailable.

"The bandits are said to have made their escape in a dark blue colored sport coupe with a rumble seat, having red or orange wire wheels; the car is reported to have Iowa license plates, the county designation of which may be 52."

Emmet Tinley's Will Gives Bulk of Estate to Two Daughters

COUNCIL BLUFFS, May 16 (AP)—The will of the late Emmet Tinley, filed for probate today, disposes of an estate of unestimated value.

Mrs. Folsom Everest and Mrs. George Spooner, daughters, share equally the bulk of the estate. However, had Mrs. Tinley survived her husband she would have received $50,000 outright before any other obligation was paid.

Dr. Mary Tinley was given bequests of $5,000, and Dr. Matthew A. Tinley and Aurelia Tinley, brother and sister, each received $1,000.

Mr. Tinley willed his $15,000 law library to his son-in-law, Lieut. Col. Folsom Everest and made an additional bequest of $10,000 to Mrs. Spooner, and $5,000 to her husband to offset it.

Hoover Meets With Officials

ORANGE, Va., May 16 (AP)—President Hoover began a series of conferences with interior department officials at his Rapidan camp today, the second of a group of meetings to be held with department heads during the summer looking to government economies.

Neither the president nor the interior department officials expected to find many ways to effect savings in that government branch.

Hoover Fishes

Mr. Hoover arrived at his camp shortly before lunch time. Interior department officials had not reached the camp when the chief executive arrived so a conference planned for the morning was abandoned. President Hoover fished for nearly an hour immediately in front of his camp and caught a number of sizeable trout.

Appropriation Higher

The interior department appropriation for the fiscal year of 1932 which begins on July 1 is about $15,000,000 more than two years ago, when Mr. Hoover took office. The $15,000,000 represents an increase in the Indian bureau appropriation and appropriations for public works such as Boulder dam.

Seek Savings

Mr. Hoover and Secretary Wilbur hoped to find some way of concentrating or coordinating activities of the interior department to effect a saving.

In the car with President Hoover on his trip to the camp were Edward H. Butler, publisher of the Buffalo Evening News, Mrs. Butler and Senator Hastings, Republican, of Delaware.

Mrs. Hoover Comes

Mrs. Hoover arrived just before lunch, accompanied by Mrs. Wilbur. Other interior department officials arrived with their wives at intervals during the morning.

Last week President Hoover conferred with war department officials and after the conference it was announced that "real savings" would be the result.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hoover, Jr., arrived before lunch.

Official Says Wet Receipts Unimportant

"Illicit Liquor Traffic Does Not Cause Gangsterism"

WASHINGTON, May 16 (AP)—Illegal traffic in liquor was said tonight by Attorney General Mitchell to provide "on an average not more than 20 per cent" of the revenue of organized gangsters prosecuted recently on income tax violations.

"This has been diminishing," he continued, "and if this be an indication of general conditions, the removal of illicit liquor traffic as a source of revenue would not end gangsterism and racketeering."

Speaking over the C.E.A. broadcasting system in the national radio forum arranged by the Washington Star, the attorney general said that "in one community we know of 48 different kinds of rackets."

"Wherever there is inefficiency or corruption on the part of state authorities, demands are made on the federal government to intervene," he added.

"Crime Local Problem"

"Dealing with organized crime is largely a local problem. These criminal gangs commit 10 violations of state law to one violation of a federal statute. Nevertheless, this department has gone a considerable way to help break down these criminal organizations."

"We are not through, but until state police and magistrates, stimulated by public opinion, take hold of this problem, it will not be solved."

Discussing anti-trust matters, the attorney general mentioned "natural resources such as oil and minerals" and said:

"Any measure which permits combinations to restrain production seems to lead to the necessity of protecting the public by governmental supervision of the combination, and that is a dubious proposal."

Efforts Will Be "Unrelenting"

The attorney general served notice that the efforts of the justice department in enforcement of federal statutes including prohibition will be "unrelenting."

"During the next three months," he said, "regional conferences attended by assistant attorneys general will be held with groups of United States attorneys and prohibition administrators to take stock of our present situation and complete the coordination between the prosecuting attorneys and the prohibition bureau which was the purpose of the transfer of the unit to this department. But progress in that direction is slow and the big factor in dealing with criminal cases in the courts is that of persons who are 'unremittent'."

"During the next three months officials of this department will visit those federal districts in which serious congestion is found, and by consultation with the judges and cooperation from the local bar and increased activity on the part of district attorneys' offices, without fundamental changes in the methods of administration criminal justice, we should succeed in a reasonable time, in removing delay in criminal trials and opening the way for prompt disposition of private litigation."

Dan Turner Guest at Fiftieth Governor's Day Celebration

300 Attend Luncheon Given by Military Men at Union

Congratulating "the pioneer and his successors who have made this day notable in Iowa history," Governor Dan Turner spoke at a luncheon in his honor at Iowa Union yesterday noon as the guest of the university's military department.

Lt. Col. Converse R. Lewis, university commandant, had previously pointed out that the Governor's day tradition had come down through a half century of state history. The first such event was June 17, 1881, 26 years after a military department was established here by state enactment.

Turner Predicts

Governor Turner also noted the correlation between economic and cultural activities, calling attention to the developments possible in education when money worries are reduced. Anticipating a period when problems of taxes and farm prices and matters of the dollar will be more nearly solved, he predicted an enhancement of state education.

The governor reminded his audience of nearly 300 state, university, and city dignitaries that Thomas Jefferson thought authorship of the Declaration of Independence and founding of the University of Virginia should rank above his other achievements. He had them perpetuated on his tombstone in preference to that of having twice been the nation's president.

Jefferson's Ideal

The ideal which Jefferson had, Governor Turner asserted, was that education should be through this institution available to the poor. Governor Turner praised state universities for continuing to offer opportunities which the less fortunate financially could not afford without them.

He was introduced by President Walter A. Jessup, who commented on the coincidence that Governor's day has been free from rain within the memory of officials since 1909, before welcoming the state executive.

In presenting the president, Colonel Lewis spoke of him as "revered by all of us . . . a university builder."

Lewis Traces History

The commandant traced military activities at the university since establishment of a department here in 1861. He pointed out the officer training objective of the National Defense act which established college R.O.T.C. units in 1920. Asserting that the United States has a relatively small war preparedness program, Colonel Lewis warned lest the R.O.T.C. should be "legislated out of existence" or caused to dwindle.

Cadet Colonel Jim B. Hay, recommissions at June commencement, commission at June commencement, explained factors which he thought had led him to take the advanced course. His reason was not the uniform which is furnished free, or the $10 monthly stipend, he asserted. "The main reason with him was 'preparation for war,'" his other chief reason was because of friendships found among the regiment's officers.

Although granting that the maneuvers taught now might not be used in "the next war," Cadet

"To secure fellowships for higher study for women."

"To emphasize the study of international relations."

"To improve the educational interest from pre-school work on up."

These are the three phases of work now being fostered by the American Association of University Women, according to a report by Mrs. Andrew H. Woods, before members of the association at a luncheon at Iowa Union yesterday. Mrs. Woods attended the national convention at Boston in April.

According to a report on the history of the association given by Mary E. Woolley, Ph.D., and president of the American Association of University Women, the first meeting was held in 1881, and was attended by 17 women. In 1882, 65 graduates of women's colleges organized the first association of college and university trade women. In 1884 the western association of collegiate alumnae was formed, and after six years the eastern and western branches were united.

In the summer of 1903 a branch was organized at Knoxville, Tenn. Since that time, branches of the organization have developed and increased over the entire country.

More than 1,000 members from the United States, attended the convention, and 54 persons from other countries were guests, among whom was Dr. Winifred Cullis of London University, London, Eng., president of the International Association of University Women.

Wisconsin Wins 3-Way Meet With Iowa, Chicago; Hawkeyes Get Six Firsts

Badgers Win From Hawks by 24 Points

Chicago Behind With Placings in Four Events

MADISON, Wis., May 16 (AP)—Although the Hawkeyes scored firsts in six of the 15 events, the all-around strength of Wisconsin nosed them out of leading place at the triangular track meet held here today. The Badgers annexed 36 points while Iowa collected 62, and Chicago trailed far behind with 17.

The Badgers won eight firsts and placed in all the events. Iowa placed in 13 and the Maroons scored their only first on Lets and counted in just four of the runs. Lets turned in a championship performance in the half mile with a run that forecasts he may break the 15 year old conference record of 1:53.2 set by Scott of Mississippi A. & M. Lets finished in 1:54.8 to establish a new handball track record.

Beckner, Iowa sprinter, pulled a tendon in a preliminary race of the 100 yard dash and probably will be out of the conference championships next week.

Sportively Speaking

By Bill Rutledge

With the Kentucky Derby victory ensconced in its record, Twenty Grand can become the outstanding horse of the year by winning the Lawrence Realization and Dwyer stakes.

Of course, the triumph yesterday afternoon at Churchill Downs was enough to insure the Greentree stable entry of a goodly measure of turf fame, but there's always more to be had.

The bone-crushing power that lies in the Cub attack asserted itself with dynamic force in the latter portion of the twin bill at Baker bowl, Philadelphia. Two in a row was as far as Manager Rogers Hornsby would permit the Bruins' losing streak to extend.

Moore performed in left field instead of Hack Wilson. The benching of Hack came in substantiation of months of prediction along the hot stove league that the home run monarch would not fit into Hershby's lineup.

Moore strengthened his right to play regularly in that position by smashing out a home run and fielding satisfactorily. The Rajah was in the midst of the battle at his old second base post. Les Sweetland, who was obtained from the Phillies in winter trading, had the joy of subduing his former mates.

The Chicago White Sox snipped their string of losses which had reached the embarrassing length of seven straight yesterday afternoon, when they jumped on the Boston Red Sox for three runs, and behind the run-tee, fourth pitcher of Pat Caraway, registered a 3 to 0 win. Caraway is a willowy Irish left hander whose eccentric delivery packs deceptiveness.

The amalgamated Order of National league pitchers can point with pride to the fact that hurling was the predominant factor in Brooklyn's 2 to 1 win over the Reds (Dazzy Vance pitching), and the Braves' 7 to 5 victory over the Cards (Carl Hubbell pitching), and the Braves' 9 to 2 triumph over the Pirates (Tom Zachary pitching).

Lee, Wisconsin; second, Roden, Wisconsin; third, Handorf, Iowa; fourth, Pyre, Wisconsin. Time :25.3.

880 yard run—Won by Letts, Chicago; second, Skowbo, Iowa; third, Mett, Wisconsin; fourth, Nelson, Chicago. Time 1:54.8. (New record, old mark 1:55.6 by Don Harvey, 1916, and Lloyd Valley, 1925, both Wisconsin.)

Hammer throw—Won by Youngerman, Iowa; second, Firsch, Wisconsin; third, Samsen, Iowa; fourth,

Twenty Grand Dashes to Record Breaking Victory in Annual Kentucky Derby

By ALAN GOULD

Associated Press Sports Writer CHURCHILL DOWNS, Louisville, Ky., May 16 (AP)—Roaring acclaim echoed down the stretch of historic Churchill Downs today as the magnificent Twenty Grand bounded in giant strides to record-shattering victory in the fifty-seventh running of the Kentucky derby. Belying his name, Twenty Grand looked like the proverbial million as, carrying the Greentree colors of Mrs. Payne Whitney, wealthy New York sportswoman, he galloped down the stretch to decisive victory over Sweep All, the west's surprise contender, and Mate, Preakness winner.

Twelve Runners Twenty Grand, the outstanding favorite in a field of 12, came with a smashing burst of speed to beat Sweep All by four good lengths, and shattered the derby as well as the track record for the route of one mile and a quarter.

The eastern colt, ridden by Charley Kurtsinger, to his first derby victory, covered the distance in 2 minutes, 14.5 seconds. This performance displaced the former derby record of 2:03.2 made by the famous old Rosebud in 1914, and knocked off the track mark of 2:03.1-5, credited to the lightly weighted Woodtrap, a half dozen years ago. It was short of the world's record of 2 minutes flat.

Davenport Wins State Track Meet AMES, May 16 (AP)— Amidst a devastating attack on existing records, Davenport high was established the new Iowa interscholastic track and field champion today in the twenty-sixth annual state carnival. The river city team, paced by the great Layden who won both hurdle races and anchored the winning half-mile relay team, scored 21 points to nose out the Eldora Training school by four-fifths of a point. North High, Des Moines won third with 13, while Keota and Harlan tied for fourth with 10 each.

Missouri, Iowa State Tie in Big Six COLUMBIA, Mo., May 16 (AP)— With a three run rally in the ninth inning the University of Missouri Tigers defeated Nebraska, 6 to 5, here today to tie for the Big Six conference baseball championship with the Oklahoma Sooners, who defeated Iowa State, 3 to 2, today.

Mathies, Iowa. Distance 139 feet, 7.2 inches.

Two mile run—Won by Wright, Wisconsin; second, Cortright, Wisconsin; third, Kelly, Chicago; fourth, Bertrand, Wisconsin. Time :9.1.

hel by the mighty Whiskroom II. A crowd of nearly 60,000 spectators thrilled at Twenty Grand's great feat. The west was prepared for this third successive triumph of the east and responded with a spontaneous outburst of enthusiasm as the rose-wreath was draped over Twenty Grand's arched neck and the gold derby trophy was presented to Mrs. Whitney by Charles Curtis, vice president of the United States.

Strongly supported right down to post time, Twenty Grand, for each $2 ticket in the mutuels, paid $3.76 to win; $3 to place and $2.60 to show.

Sweep All Surprises Fans Sweep All surprised the talent by giving the favorite a race and beating the second choice Mate by three lengths. Sweep All paid $15.58 to place and $7.16 to show. Mate paid the show price of $2.62.

It was a horse race for at least a mile of the route, until Twenty Grand took complete command. The race carried a gross value of $58,725 and was worth $48,725 to Twenty Grand. Sweep All won $6,000 for his owner while Mate took the third price, $3,000, and Spanish Play fourth money of $1,000. As the pulses of the thousands of onlookers quickened, the bluebloods of the turf swayed nervously in the starting stalls, then bounded forward to reverberating cry, "They're off!"

Cubs Wallop Phillies After Losing Spell

Root Driven From Box as Bruins Lose First Game

PHILADELPHIA, May 16 (AP)—The Chicago Cubs won their first game in the east after four successive setbacks by trimming the Philadelphia Phillies in the second game of a doubleheader here today before 15,000 fans. The score in the first game was 5 to 1 for the Phils and in the nightcap 17 to 6.

Dudley was hit hard in the first game but did well in the clincher, while the Phils knocked Charley Root out of the box to gain their victory.

Sweetland started the second game for the Cubs, but was clubbed from the mound with his mates holding a narrow lead. Malone relieved him and stopped the Phillies, getting credit for the victory. The Cubs, on the other hand, pounded Collins and mixed their hits with fielding boots by the home club to insure their triumph. Moore made the only home run of the day in the seventh inning of the second encounter.

Brookhart Prefers Inland System to Nicaraguan Canal

WASHINGTON, May 16 (AP)—Opposing construction of a Nicaraguan canal, Senator Brookhart, Republican Iowa, has demanded more rapid development of the inland waterways system.

Declaring that the Panama canal has worked a heavy disadvantage against the Mississippi valley, Senator Brookhart declared "Its benefits have all gone to the Atlantic and Pacific coasts."

"Development of the inland waterways system from the lake to the gulf, possibly both from Chicago and Lake Erie; the development of the Mississippi to St. Paul, the development of the Missouri to Montana, together with the Ohio development and together with an efficient federal barge line over the whole system would do much to remove this discrimination and equalize the benefits of the canal for the whole country," he said.

Man Confesses He Robbed 2 Theatres

Liszszak told police that he went to Des Moines to get a berth with the baseball team. Out of funds, he held up the theater and then came on to Omaha.

KNOW YOUR IOWA CITY

Seven City Churches Will Cooperate in Daily Vacation Church School, June 8 to July 3

With the realization that most children connected with denominational organizations receive little more than 15 or 20 hours of religious training, an organization called the Iowa City council of religious education was formed late in 1930 to remedy the problem of adequate instruction.

The organization which is connected with the state council of religious education and the international council of religious education, is an outgrowth of the community teachers training school held last fall in Iowa City. Since its formation, regular meetings have been held twice a month.

At the last meeting, the Rev. Elmer Dierks, pastor of the Baptist church, was elected dean of the council. He has been active in religious education and has created much interest in the local situation. The following churches are represented with members in the council: Baptist, Prof. Roscoe Woods of the mathematics department; Christian, Mrs. Grace Huston; Congregational, Mrs. J. H. Pierce; English Lutheran, Dr. S. A. Neumann; Episcopal, M. F. Carpenter; Methodist, Mrs. C. J. Lapp, and Presbyterian, Prof. Edward H. Lauer of the physical education department.

The daily vacation church school, from June 8 to July 3, is to be one of the immediate projects of the council. It will be a cooperative enterprise which children from any church may attend.

The organization aims to act as an integrating force in local problems of religious education, and as a clearing house for the churches. Another contribution being undertaken by the organization is the gathering of religious educational material from all denominations. This work will be continued and is to be available for any person wishing to make use of it.

Why Look for Talent Afar?

MUSIC appetites have been appeased by a menu of programs by nationally known figures during the 1930-31 concert season.

Professor Clapp has been guest conductor of the People's Symphony orchestra in Boston, Mass., and field secretary of the Juilliard musical foundation.

The concert is the primary venture of this nature should be inaugurated by a man of Professor Clapp's caliber.

Both Spirit and Flesh: HOW often has an incident occasioned the comment that "the spirit was willing but the flesh was weak!"

Consequently, the radio address of Pope Pius XI Friday is important because it shows recognition of that fact by the best organized sect in the world and the second most numerous religious group.

It is a matter of concern to a church with a complete program whether working men have physical basis for being spiritually and morally strong.

When he spoke of "social justice" he recognized that under existing conditions this ideal is far from being realized.

Might Help Unemployment: WELL, it seems that Clara Bow is ailing again. Between trials in court and nervous breakdowns, it is doubtful whether Clara will be able to lend her personality to the screen for any notable length of time.

Flexnerisms: "A field expedition to unearth an Assyrian palace is admittedly a proper undertaking for university professors; but should coal strikes, Indian unrest, rubber, oil, and American lynchings be for the present mainly left to journalists, travelers, and politicians?"

"The sort of easy rubbish which may be counted towards an A.B. degree or the so-called combined degrees passes the limits of credibility."

"America does not ignore all distinctions. It simply ignores the real distinctions."

Tomorrow's University

(An editorial series dealing with present trends and future possibilities of the University of Iowa. The vision of its administrative leaders, potentialities in its program, and transitions already under way will be included among examples and suggestions of how the university's functions might be carried out to better advantage.)

Time to Rouse

THAT they try to "give the public what it wants" has been the defense of many sensational newspaper publishers, many panders of other sorts.

It is impossible to escape restraining forces, especially in an institution subject somewhat to political whims. But, even within the limits imposed by society in the most outrageous of its demands, courage and liberalism can arrive at a position which will not entail a sacrifice of standards.

Yet most of his suggestions, including some reprinted elsewhere in these columns, involve overcoming only inertia and getting out of a rut.

"It does not matter that some persons go to sleep, provided only enough others are wide awake and fertile at the maximum of their powers."

"American college students are, at the close of four years, intellectually considered, an unselected and untrained body of attractive boys and girls, who have for the most part not yet received even a strenuous secondary school training."

"... the education process has once more to be interrupted, suspended, or confused, in order that he may learn the 'principles' of salesmanship from a Ph.D. who has never sold anything, or the 'principles' of marketing from a Ph.D. who has never marketed anything."

"... the American college of education, not wholly, but largely oblivious of the really important, is devoting itself more and more to the technical, trivial, and sometimes absurd."

"If there is a country in the world, in which the advertiser is destroying individuality and compelling almost everything, regardless of needs, wants, and solvency, to buy the same thing, it is the United States ..."

"The inferiority of the product becomes obvious later, when a discriminating college professor or employer takes his lamp, like Diogenes, and starts the search for a high school or college graduate, who can write and spell, and who is master of the elements of mathematics, a science, or a modern language."

Sculptor Edgardo Simone says that "The supreme riddle of existence is an American insurance policy." Wonder if he ever read the registration instructions at an American university.

The usual handsome diplomas, printed on a fine quality of sandpaper, are being given out this month at the School of Experience.

Says Frank E. Gibson: "Americans are now divided into two classes—those who are worrying about getting a job and those who are worrying about prohibition."

"Leo Rodak, Niek Scialaba, Don Gonzales, Scotty Sylvano, Phil Dardell, Fred Caserio, Jack Kranz, Yustin Sirutis"—and in case you think it's a forecast on the all American selections, you're wrong. They're only the representatives of "America" in the Chicago Tribune fisticuffs the other night.

A diplomat is a person who brings home the bacon without spilling the beans, says a Canadian politician. And it might be added, a politician is a man who finally gets both the beans and the bacon himself.

The Concordia Blade's Weather Bear says he doesn't see where they get this stuff about trial marriages being so modern. Some of the old-fashioned ones were just as much of a trial as others are nowadays.

What's Wrong With U.S. Universities?

By Roland White

"No one can possibly tell whether America is going to make to civilization a contribution commensurate with its resources and opportunities," says Abraham Flexner in his "Universities: American English German." But the obvious conclusion of his book is that the United States will not unless there is a drastic change in its educational system, which he finds inferior to the systems of England and Germany.

After 200 pages in which the onetime Carnegie medical education investigator dissects and disapproves of nearly everything in American education from type-writing in junior high school to theses on subjects like "A study of the bacterial content of cotton undershirts," he restates convictions he has already at least intimated.

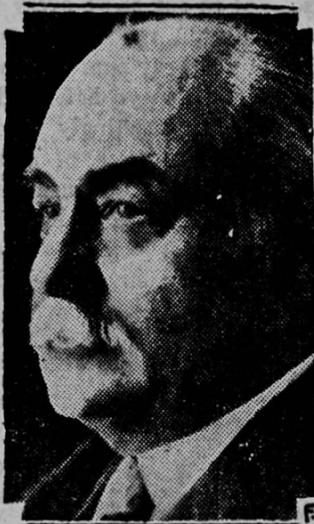

"The make believe professions—journalism, business, library science, domestic science, and optometry—could be discarded; they would not be missed either by the university or society," he declares. He has put on his taboo list elsewhere in the book military training, physical education (taken seriously beyond giving exercise for undergraduates), domestic science, hotel management, chemical education, debate, and others.

"Schools of education might be reformed and put on probation," he advises, and "schools of medicine, law, and engineering could be subjected to searching criticism and such reform as they may require."

And all the while he is indicating that universities are cluttered with vocational subjects to the detriment of their culture, Mr. Flexner sets forth assertions that make any designation of junior colleges as mere extended high schools a case of the pot's calling the kettle black. For universities—he is not talking about colleges, but state and endowed universities—give their undergraduates only an advanced secondary education, according to Flexner.

Quoting Lord Haldane to the effect that "it is in universities that . . . the soul of a people mirrors itself," Flexner shows a decided tendency to call Uncle Sam's soul black with the smoke of industry. "The (German) monarchy affected the universities in some such way as business now affects them in the United States. Social democrats were excluded from the highest academic posts . . ." he declares.

Butt of Criticism

Nicholas Murray Butler, spectacular president of Columbia university, is the butt of criticism for his administrative policies in Abraham Flexner's book on universities as he was in Upton Sinclair's "The Goose Step." Politician, (he was once candidate for Republican vice-presidential nomination), anti-prohibitionist, nominal pacifist, he recently announced a system of athletic control which will remove evils of professionalism from Columbia.

And, crowning indictment of them all:

" . . . there are Babbitts in all countries, not only in the United States; but 'Babbittry' in the presidency of great universities is an exclusively—as it is a widespread—American phenomenon."

The United States university graduate is apt to be a Babbitt, hints Mr. Flexner, while the English product will be a gentleman, the German a scholar. Universities exist to produce scholars.

"The whole American public may never be civilized," Mr. Flexner is confident, "but America's contribution to civilization depends not upon the whole public, but upon a gifted, earnest . . . minority."

Prime criticism: U. S. universities like Columbia are too intent on new enrollment records, too little concerned with this minority "Is not Columbia engaged in lowering American culture as well as in building it up?" demands Flexner.

To Columbia, in many phases of its multifarious activities at least, education is not a labor of love; it is a business. So charges the author, and backs up his accusations with an expose of methods employed in enticing students for correspondence and extension work.

Columbia's correspondence work he regards as nothing less than a racket, one which cheapens the value of being able to say, "I am a Columbia student." Through it, he says, the "chain store" concept enters American education. It is not quite clear to him how a youngster or adult would learn to pronounce French or Spanish via mail, or how the mail carrier can be a substitute for the professor.

But he quotes from high pressure salesmanship circulars an assertion that "Columbia university now offers a method for the home study of art that makes an hour at home more profitable than days of art school attendance." . . . And that there may be no doubt about it, the university, operating from Maine, supplied the inquirer with scores of testimonials of the patent medicine variety . . .

But Columbia and Chicago, also used as an example, are not the sole offenders. They are merely the archetype.

" . . . the subjects must be substantial, the students must be competent and serious, the instructors of high quality and thoroughly protected against exploitation," didacticizes the critic. "In so far as I know university extension in America, no university that engages in 'service' work observes these or any other ascertainable limits."

Another prime criticism is expressed in a declaration that "Universities must at times give society, not what society wants, but what it needs." Failure to do this in the United States distresses Flexner.

At the outset he tells why in historical, prophetic vein. The country has grown from a thin rural population on the seaboard to an empire in which industry is more important than agriculture and enormous discrepancies of wealth exist. Yet the documentary basis of government and society remain essentially the same, "discordant with the facts."

"Publicists and jurists have therefore been forced to make inherited formulae mean something that they do not mean and could not have meant. The easy and effective reconceiving and rewording of theory and ideas are thus gravely hampered."

With readjustments necessary, "The 'great society' must and wants to understand itself . . . one cannot be surprised that America is a seething chaos, in which things get the better of ideas."

And examples are not lacking. " . . . student buildings of elaborate design, constructed while the college or university is pleading its inability to pay decent salaries—all these have sprung up on every hand; poor indeed is the institution which does not display buildings which it cannot afford to possess.

"Meanwhile, less than a dozen endowed American universities have as much as $20,000,000 in endowment—which is approximately the cost of a cruiser!"

But with the Germans lack of money is the chief handicap; they "not only value education, but know what it is." This is not true of the United States, where, in spite of "almost boundless resources,"

" . . . a very small part of our unheard-of national wealth . . . is devoted to the uses to which a civilized society would attach, and assuredly some day must attach, the highest importance."

Flexner's book is to universities as a whole what the famous Carnegie bulletin twenty-three was to athletics. That subject he considers sufficiently handled, accords it an additional punch with the statement that "There is not a college or university in America which has the courage to place athletics where every one perfectly well knows they belong."

But the book soon degenerates from the prophetic and profound to the detailed, becoming of thesis caliber, amply footnoted. Interest thereafter slackens except for portions in which the reader has special interest.

While the only specific reference to the University of Iowa is complimentary, Flexner has no thornless bouquets for anybody. His praise for the college of medicine has previously been printed in the Sunday magazine. It may be noted that even the best in the nation—John Hopkins—is only one of those "excellent as far as they go . . . defective."

His meaty comments are reminiscent in places of vitriolic Upton Sinclair, who was to all universities what Verne Marshall was to the University of Iowa, in "The Goose Step." Not academic or educational in viewpoint, like Flexner, he charged of the University of Pennsylvania that "The people of the state were putting up a million dollars for it—they are now putting up a million and a half; but they have no say as to how this million dollars is spent!"

Though less rabid than Socialist Sinclair, Flexner assents to his

Nothing Doing Today

By Bonar Wood

HENRY ANDREWS clutched his shabby overcoat more closely about him and his pale lips set themselves in a hard straight line. The night was clear and cold, and overhead the stars shot pinpoints of frosted light toward the frozen earth. The moon rode high in the north and cast a frigid stare earthward, marking and chilling all it touched. The wind blew in little gusts down the almost deserted street, eddied round the bases of lamp posts and whipped tiny particles of snow into miniature whirlpools that sifted through the man's worn trousers, nipping his long thin legs.

Since early in the morning Henry had tramped the streets looking for work. He had left the flat before breakfast with a forced smile on his lips and a cheery ring to his voice, disclaiming hunger and optimistically telling his wife that "something will surely turn up today."

Elsa had smiled, he remembered, and patted his arm understandingly. She realized the remaining half loaf of bread and the small kettle of beef stew was scarcely enough for the children. But she hadn't complained; Elsa wasn't that sort. That made it so hard to go back now, empty-handed.

There was only one chance left. Wally, the waiter down at Thompson's restaurant, had mentioned that the boss might be able to use someone the last of the week for night work. Wally thought it would be worth a try anyway. Henry thought so too; anything was worth a try after being eight months out of work.

Henry turned up eighth street breasting the sweep of the wind. How cold it was! The slush was seeping through his thin shoes, and he wriggled his toes to restore circulation. Two blocks farther on, a well lighted cafe window, with the slogan "Thompson's—A Good Clean Place to Eat" blazoned across the glass, halted him. Henry stopped just outside the doorway, stamped both feet free of snow, brushed off his overcoat and adjusted his hat. Then opening the door he stepped inside. The warm air, saturated with the aroma of freshly fried steak and onions, struck him full in the face. The steam from the coffee urn where Wally was making the night's supply caught and enveloped with its fragrance. The hollow empty feeling at his waistline clamored for food.

Henry leaned over the counter and spoke. "Anything doing today, Wally?"

Wally turned his perspiring red face, showing annoyance at being interrupted in his rite. Recognizing Henry, he clambered down off the short stool and waddled to the counter. "Sure cold, ain't it? Say, I'm afraid I got bad news for yuh.

I was talkin' to the boss today, and he said he wasn't takin' nobody on now. Business too poor, I guess. Say, how've things been breakin' the last couple days?"

Henry forced a smile. "Pretty bad, Wally, but I'll probably hit something tomorrow. Well, thanks for your help; I'll be seeing you."

He glanced at the coffee urn, hypnotized by the fragrant steam boiling from the top. Wally looked at him knowingly.

"Say, I'll stake you to a cup of coffee. You sure do look bad; there ain't no color in your face at all."

Henry mumbled something about having forgotten his wallet, but Wally winked and slipped a big steaming cup in front of him.

"Say, forget it. Here's one on the boss he won't know nothin' about."

Henry gulped the hot liquid in long draughts. It warmed him and seemed to make the blood rush to every part of his body. He frigid and bare. There was no one about now to break the spell of chill solitude. Henry had seen no person since the jovial Wally, and that fact made more desolate the walk across the span.

The wind, having a full sweep, rushed over the bridge, freezing all it touched. It tore open Henry's overcoat and gnawed at his legs. He stumbled on, head down, breathing hard. The intense cold seemed to cut short every breath and to chill the very air in his lungs. It beat against his brow, numbing the eye balls and making his brain achingly tired.

Directly in front of him, Henry saw a concrete bench sheltered somewhat by the balustrades of the bridge. He sank down on this to rest for a moment, and his head slipped down between his hands. He was tired, so tired.

HENRY roused with a start, wondering how long he had been sitting there. The cold in

Half Way

Between the earth and the sky, in your own world, supported here by a man-made frame that pulsates with life; yet you are alone. Overhead masses of clouds intermittently blot out the sun. The clear blue spaces in between stretch invitingly into the void. You climb toward the open, and presently you are above the clouds; those that appeared dark from below are now white and brilliantly reflect the dazzling light of the sun. Their edges spread in fringe and lattice, and occasionally they break as though some unseen power had pulled them apart. Most of the clouds are now far beneath you, and the open places show dark patches of earth instead of blue sky. A hundred miles away the lofty peak of a mountain rears its head above the clouds, momentarily sharing with you the glory of this new world. The wind blows tears from your eyes; it tugs against your cheeks until they feel oddly distorted.

The air is lighter now, and you notice the difference in your breathing. It is cooler; the sun seems to lack warmth. Your heart sings that you are free—free on the wing of the spirit which no earthly flight can conquer. Below you the earth and above you the sky, a wonderful dream! But it quickly vanishes, for you are man and must return to the earth to which you are bound by a stronger power.

sat a moment after finishing, dreading to leave the warmth and the proximity of food. A clock on the wall struck twelve. Twelve o'clock? He'd better be going; Elsa would be worried.

Rising, he thanked Wally, who was once more absorbed in his coffee making. The pudgy form within the cloud of steam turned and raised his hand in a friendly farewell.

"Be seein' ya; good luck."

Henry opened the door and stepped into the street. It was snowing intensely and the brief warmth of the moment in the restaurant soon left. Snow sifted down his collar, and his shoes again filled with cold slush. Six more blocks were passed, and the approach to the long concrete bridge dividing the town loomed up out of the increasing blizzard. The street lamps cast an eerie light across the narrow way now padded with fluffy snow. Everything, even the lights, seemed his body seemed to have given way to a sort of lethargic warmth. Only his legs were neither cold nor warm; he just didn't feel them at all. That was odd, he thought.

Suddenly he recollected. He was on his way home. He'd better get going. Rising, he glanced down at his legs and feet; yes, they were still there all right. His eyes wavered, and directly in front of him spied something covered with snow. He picked it up. It was a wallet—a very fat wallet. With anxious fingers he opened it. The bill sheaf was filled with money. A great file of bills, greenbacks, yellow-backs, all new and of large denominations flashed before his eyes as he thumbed the contents.

Here was a new lease on life! No more would Elsa and the children go hungry, no more would the cold winter sap his vitality. He pictured a cozy room, logs crackling in the fireplace throwing out heat, friendliness. From the kitch-proposition that industry, "the interlocking directorate," exercises too much control, that buildings are valued above men. With this pair agrees Walter Lippmann, newspaper editorial writer who seems least partial of the three on the proposition that something should be done about the anomalous position of the faculty man.

Flexner, calling the American professoriate "a proletariat, lacking the amenities and dignities they are entitled to enjoy," includes this charge in his challenge to university administrations. Sinclair thinks professors should strike, feeling they will get fair treatment in no other way. Lippmann condemns their apathy and lack of unity and independence, remarking that "The tragedy and absurdity of the thing is that they could so easily rally a following of their support if they had the imagination to realize how strong they are."

That there is suppression of divergent opinions Sinclair and Flexner both conclude. In "The Goose Step" is a largely inaccurate treatment of the University of Iowa quoted at second hand: "a professor can say anything he wants to in the classroom, if the students don't talk too much and thus arouse sentiment in the staff unfriendly to the university. An 'injudicious' remark might cost the university a half million dollars in much needed appropriations."

Alongside that comparative mild Sinclairian indictment may be placed a general assertion of Flexner about all universities:

"The contention that they suppress freedom of speech cannot, I believe, be sustained, except in rare instances and in conspicuous or inferior institutions. But in social and economic realms they create an atmosphere of timidity which is not without effect in their appointments and in their promotions."

This university is probably about as much above reproach as any. Yet in a public statement last week an alumnus said "The teaching there is scientifically orthodox. You don't find professors down there skyrocketing for notoriety along some abstract problems of theology or social vagaries—each one is a master in his specialty and limits his industry to it."

There is no way of knowing exactly what the alumnus who said that meant. If the implication which his praise contains has evidence to support it, probably that is the severest indictment Milton's Areopagitica.

Toward Reality

ABOUT OURSELVES by H. A. OVERSTREET; NORTON, $3.00. Reviewed by IRMA GOEPPINGER.

Because he considers the present trend to be toward psychology, H. A. Overstreet offers us a book "About Ourselves." He has written it in the interest of the great middle class—the normal people.

Perhaps the word "psychology" lends a forbidding sound to the book. If so, it should be removed, for "About Ourselves" is an interesting, wholly absorbing study of our associates. On every page, almost in every paragraph, we are given an accurate word picture of one of our friends. The reading of the book becomes a game and we hurriedly leave one of our acquaintances to discover who is described next.

We are forced to laugh at the baring of one friend's characteristics. We stop to puzzle over the cause of another's peculiar behavior. We find ourselves seeking remedies for unfortunate mannerisms—in others. We try to name explanations for actions, ideas, tastes. In short, we try more than ever to understand ourselves and those about us.

Mr. Overstreet has divided his book in order to treat separately the two outstanding classes of people—those who move away from and those who move toward reality. In each of these divisions he cites numerous examples to explain more clearly the vastly different types of behavior which we meet every day. He names various possible causes and hints at remedies. But his inclination in the latter is to let the reader figure out his own treatments. He encourages individual experimentation in human understanding.

"About Ourselves" is fundamentally a book of psychology but it has cast off the uninviting mantle of a text. It does not consciously teach. It informs, explains and discusses, but it does so in a thoroughly entertaining manner.

It could have been better written. There were numerous opportunities for a more brilliant style. Mr. Overstreet might have dressed up his book and made his subject much more appealing. In some places he disguised it a little and the material took on the characteristic of a completely absorbing story. But at other times the author was so intent upon presenting the psychology that he forgot his literary obligations.

"About Ourselves" is an important book. It should be read by everyone in the interests of others. The advanced psychologist will probably consider it too elementary, but to the average person it will be a useful study, a revelation of things he always wanted to learn but neglected.

Read about yourselves in "About Ourselves." It is a classified directory of your friends and you.

Goodest Best

LILIES OF THE ALLEY by OCTAVUS ROY COHEN; APPLETON, $2.00. Reviewed by FRANK JAFFE.

Unless someone has beat me to it, I want to go on record as saying, in the author's phraseology, that "this book is the mostest fond thing I is of."

In this volume, Cohen has taken some of his better known Negro characters, added a few new ones, and set them all down on location at the Midnight Pictures Corporation Incorporated, in "Bumminham." Each chapter is a narrative in itself and they all are concerned with the advent of talkies to the Midnight lot.

That, however, brings complications. Midnight must discover a theme song writer, and so announces a contest open to all the "cullud folks in Bumminham." Contest Judge Professor Aleck Champagne is finally forced to admit that "Sizzlin' Sadie," composed by a hated rival for the hand of Miss Esther Babble, was the best theme song submitted. In the characters' own words:

"Aleck," remarked Florian Slappey, "you sholy is sad lookin'."

"Ain't it the troof, Florian? An' why shouldn't I be?"

"You mean on account of Albany White winnin' that job with Midnight?"

"Uh-huh. An' also preventin' me fum successfully co'tin' his ex-fiansay."

But Aleck found a way out and the crowd of contestants and their friends gathered in the lodge rooms of The Sons and Daughters of I Will Arise were due for a surprise.

At 8:25 when all were assembled and the professor stepped up to the rostrum to announce the winner, his air was jaunty and his ebony face was wreathed in smiles. After a brief preliminary announcement, he said:

"Now, brethren an' sistern, it is my honor an' duty to present this prize of a six months' contract with Midnight Pitchers Corporation, Inc., at a salary of fifty dollars a week, an' may I say that I ain't never had no happier job?"

"An' now, folks," announced Professor Aleck Champagne in a clear, triumphant voice, "I take great pleasure in awarding this job with Midnight to Mistuh Beethoven for his song entitled 'Sizzlin' Sadie,' which was originally published under the name of 'Minuet in G'."

The rest of the book is crowded with startlingly humorous incidents concerning Opus Randall and Welford Potts, Midnight's co-stars; Massive Ellis and Martin Buck, the talkie experts "fum New Yawk"; Epic Peters' roadhouse, President Orifice R. Latimer, Lexicon Vick, Moderate Barr, Magnolius Ricketts, the dumb but famous actor; Malignant Smith and Lawyer Evans Chew.

Each event is chockful of action; the situations are new and funnier; enhanced by the dialect of the "Bumminham cullud folks." Although the repetition of distinctive phrases may become somewhat monotonous, I suppose they are as vital to the whole as, perhaps, "Mistuh Vinnie Napp, technician," or "Sally Crouch's Cozy Home Hotel for Colored." And the entire volume can be read and thoroughly enjoyed in less than two hours.

Armchair Hunting

TALES OF ROD AND GUN, Compiled by HARRY MCGUIRE; MACMILLAN, $2.50. Reviewed by JACK PATTON.

Ever have a yen to live out-of-doors? So have I. But I couldn't either. Except once a year, for a two weeks' stretch, when I have been able to get out and relax, to fish and hunt, to tramp around, to explore, to breathe in honestly fresh air, and to sort of forget the hurry and rush of everyday life.

Like you probably, I have had to be content for the other 50 weeks in the year to stay at home more or less. I enjoy things as they are—I have to, in fact—but under it all I vision life out-of-doors as a sort of paradise.

On my trips to nature's heaven, I have spent hours just listening to what we call old-timers, or guides, or backwoodsmen. They have interesting tales indeed. They seem to carry us off into another sort of world where we care little of what goes on, or goes by, just as long as outdoor life stays with us.

But as I have said before, that kind of life just stays with most of us for two weeks out of the year. The rest of the time our next best bet is to read of our nature's paradise. No man has ever gone fishing, ever put a gun to his shoulder, ever tracked a single animal, ever had a dog for his best pal, ever really lived—without being constantly interested in all forms of outdoor life.

Harry McGuire, editor of "Outdoor Life," is one of the men who is constantly seeking outdoor life stories for us stay-at-homes to read. He is an outdoor man, himself, as naturally he would be, with his specialties along the big game hunting line. In his editor's chair, Mr. McGuire reads as many as 500 manuscripts a month and picks out 15 or so to pass on to us shut-ins. It was while doing this that he conceived the idea of picking out the best tales of rod and gun he could find and putting them together in one book. "Tales of Rod and Gun," an anthology of hunting and fishing yarns, is the result.

From the pens of such well-known writers as Zane Grey and Rex Beach and from others we have never heard of before come these stories of various outdoor subjects. There's the story of the lonesome dog who pined away at the duck blind, the picture of the great brown bear, and 15 other stories that made me wish my two weeks' vacation was starting tomorrow and not three months from now. I knew nothing about tuna fish, or hunting lions, but with Zane Grey giving me the word pictures I caught myself several times trying to help him land a big boy, or getting ready to aim.

Seventeen stories and 17 pictures that take you out of your reading den right into nature's paradise are the "Tales of Rod and Gun." Anyone who has ever stood on a mountain trail, tramped through the forest, hidden in a duck blind, tracked down prey, had a dog for a pal—and hasn't everyone got that zest for outdoor life?—will like this book. Perhaps there are better stories written, maybe there are not but at any rate we have the first attempt at collecting them together in Mr. McGuire's book. You may like some one story better, but where can you find 17 of the best collected together other than in this book?

Nothing Doing Today

en he could hear his wife preparing dinner and the fragrance of beef roast touched his nostrils. And coffee again, steaming coffee. The children were playing on the floor, rolling on the rug close by the fire's warmth. Yes, here was money for everything, money to tide him over the winter, money to provide a presentable appearance when asking for work. It was new life, new blood in his veins. Clutching the wallet close to him he started to run wildly, blindly toward home and Elsa.

HENRY ANDREWS was dead. Hours later, seated in his warm office, the coroner told reporters, "Death caused by malnutrition and exposure. Just another depression casualty."
