Stock Prices Steady Under Dull Trading

Bonds Only Issues Not Returning Balance of Gains

NEW YORK, Oct. 19 (AP)—With the important exception of bonds, financial markets returned a balance of gains today.

Stocks refused to be frightened by early heaviness of rails and advanced slowly with coppers showing the way. Net gains were largely fractional and trading was dull.

In bonds several United States government issues touched new lows, while many railroad issues acted discouraged by the continued absence of the favorable news so widely predicted last week. Japanese government bonds were weak in substantial turnovers.

Wall Street Content

Wall street seemed content to let stocks mark time until a clearer appraisal of the outlook was available. President Hoover's conference with Premier Laval of France looms just now as the most important event on the week's calendar, although the situation in the far east is being closely watched.

Coppers profited by somewhat better buying on the part of foreign consumers. Gains of a point or more in the group were numerous. Chemicals also advanced. Most rails reduced their early losses; some cancelled them completely.

Industrials Higher

Such prominent industrials as U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Electric, General Motors, National Electric and Case, averaged half a point higher at the close. American Telephone and North American strengthened the utilities with gains of more than a point. Total sales of 858,757 shares were the smallest since Sept. 1.

The small gold movement, combined with slight easiness in the French franc, and reports that France had bought a large volume of acceptances here, caused banking circles to feel that perhaps the higher money rates were having an effect and that the peak of the transatlantic flow had been passed.

Prices Soar Upward in Wheat, Corn

CHICAGO, Oct. 19 (AP)—Breadstuffs went briskly upward today, wheat and rye both outdoing previous top quotations for the season. There was aggressive speculative buying, simultaneous with assertions that France would negotiate for the purchase of 50,000,000 bushels of United States government-sponsored wheat holdings. Other stimulating factors were 2,570,000 bushels decrease of the United States wheat visible supply total and late rumors of Japanese troop movements in Manchuria.

Wheat closed strong, at the day's highest figures, 12-13 cents advanced, corn 1-1/2 up, oats 1-1/4 to 3 higher and provisions unchanged to a rise of 15 cents.

Special impetus to the upward trend of wheat came from a Paris cable saying the French government through the Laval commission would conduct negotiations for the purchase of American farm board wheat. Failure to confirm this report led to a transient early setback, but speculative demand persisted. Rye was influenced by wheat strength, and closed like wheat at the day's topmost level, 11-1/4 to 12 cents up.

Corn and oats followed wheat and rye upward, despite excellent weather for field work in the corn belt.

Provisions responded to upturns in live values.

Closing indemnities: wheat—Dec. 57 1/2 to 58 1/2, 54 1/2 to 55; March, 57 1/2, 58 1/2, 59 1/2, 59 1/2; July, 57-57 1/2. Corn—Dec. 36 1/2, 37 1/2 to 3; May 40 1/2, 41 1/2 to 42 1/2; July, 44, offers.

Corn joined the rally in wheat, with considerable short covering as well as commission buying. The cash demand was moderate. Purchases to arrive totaled 62,000 bushels. Some buying of corn futures was done against sales of wheat. Chicago receipts of corn were 218 cars, compared with 164 a year ago. Primary arrivals were 539,000 bushels, against 631,000 at this time last year.

SKIPPY—Making the "Wheels Go 'Round"

Personal Quarrel Between Lawyers Eclipses Dispute Involving Magnate's Riches

NEW YORK, Oct. 19 (AP)—A. L. Erlanger produced but never lived to present what may well be the greatest drama of his career.

The third act opened today in surrogate's court. Among the players was the woman who claims to have been denied—Mrs. Charlotte Fixel. She says she was the common law wife of the late theater magnate and entitled to dower rights in the $75,000,000 he left.

Her's is a minor incident in the drama. At one counsel table sits Max D. Steuer, at the other, Isidor J. Kresel, and before any lines can be spoken, a grand jury, at the behest of Steuer, is reindicting Kresel for his connection with the suspension of the Bank of the United States.

Steuer Wins Trial

The first act goes back 16 years. Both Kresel and Steuer came from Austria as boys and both worked their way out of east side squalor.

Erlanger unwittingly brought them together for the first bitter contest which in the years to come was to make history as one of the legal profession's keenest rivalries.

Kresel represented Erlanger then and he now represents the Erlanger estate. Steuer again represents the woman in the case.

In this first act he represented Edith St. Clair, an actress, and he brought suit against Erlanger and won a judgment on her behalf. Kresel obtained an affidavit from her in which she said Steuer framed the suit.

Then he filed charges against Steuer and left no stone unturned in a prosecution intended to disbar him.

Thomas A. Edison. ANOTHER name has been inscribed in the Book of Gold beside that of the Persian prince who asked the angel to put him down as "one who loves his fellow men." Thomas A. Edison is dead.

Sensing the loss of a skilled workman, a valuable citizen, and a good man, it is difficult to agree that "this machine age has produced no leaders worthy of its towering buildings, its tremendous speed, and its intricate mechanism."

In so doing it would be necessary to ignore the powerful brain which created and perfected much of the groundwork upon which the splendor of the machine age is laid, and to praise farther the cold telegraph tickers, the silver tower of the Empire State building, the blaze of artificial light on Broadway.

As well sit in the great out of doors on a peaceful night to gaze at the multitudinous stars in the vast canopy of sky and not see in them a higher power's handiwork.

In the face of the world left tragedy of Edison's death the same question arises in another form, "Has the machine age popularized Edison or has Edison made the age?" Perhaps no other man has contributed so unstintedly, so unselfishly, and so skillfully to modern civilization, and yet in the face of facilities existing before Edison's work was started it is difficult to speculate as to how much he might have accomplished had he lived 200 years ago.

It is possible that such a master workman would have found a means to his end, whatever equipment was at hand, but there is an abundance of room for doubt of it.

Without attempting to settle the question of whether Edison could have been a genius in any age, humanity is ready to recognize that his inventions have revolutionized not only the homes of the world but industry as well.

The "intricate mechanism and tremendous speed," the "towering buildings" of the machine age would be somewhat unimpressive were the sum total of Thomas Edison's contributions subtracted from civilization as it is in 1931.

Whether or not the man or his works have been more important to society, Edison's character was worthy of his achievements, and doubtless would have been outstanding without them.

A tireless philanthropist, "spiritually literate," Edison has been the "kind giver" to many in distress. A keen mind and a quick wit served to make him one of the country's most respected commentators.

And now it is fitting that the whole world pause for tribute to Thomas A. Edison, inventor, philanthropist, and "one who loved his fellow men."

A Partial Victory. THAT AL CAPONE is packing his grips for a trip to Florida is somewhat disheartening news, but it can't detract all the glamor from the momentary uplift given the public by his conviction of income tax evasion charges.

That a court and jury could be found to cooperate with a relentless prosecuting attorney far enough to convict the leader of Chicago's crime, is noteworthy and quite a public victory, even if "Snorky" does appeal his sentence and spend a vacation in Florida.

Eventually the law will get Capone and the rest of his kind, but it is comforting to get a piece of reassuring action now and then. It helps sustain public attention which is the factor that will ultimately settle the battle between crime and law.

Mussolini Economy. MUSSOLINI and the political theories he stands for have received their share of bitter criticism, yet Il Duce has recently given his country a lesson in governmental economy that could well be followed by many another nation.

The Italian dictator has forewarned elaborate and costly banquets, has refused to attend receptions where costly foods and program will be arranged.

The pomp and ceremony which has long been the delight not only of governments but of the popular mind as well should be the first item to be cut on the expense list when budget paring needs to be done.

Governments have nearly everywhere in the present emergency turned upon education or civil service to effect economies because of their apparent flexibility.

However, few countries have thought to limit the pleasure spending any more than have individuals. In fact drastic economy programs ordinarily require a good deal of expensive political activity to put into effect.

Mussolini, in the heart of the world's section of effusive and elaborate entertainment, may have been thinking of his own political future in insisting upon simple reception programs, but he has established a worthy precedent.

Two Styles of Charity Football

Eastern colleges, urged on by the national employment committee of President Hoover's, have agreed to stake a football rodeo to take place in New Haven and New York. Each game will be for 20 minutes and an active day of football games is planned for the spectator.

In the meanwhile, Big Ten officials, upon being approached on the same subject, are withholding any opinion on the matter. Since charity games were already approved of earlier this fall, to take place after the regular conference season, it is wholly probable that a plan similar to that in the east might be adopted.

Such a manner of conducting football games for charity might simplify matters in numbers. Yet we do not believe it would be as remunerative, as far as the charity side is concerned. Under the Big Ten system, the charity games will undoubtedly be used to decide the championship, in as much as it appears that several teams will tie for first place.

Under the eastern system, this would be impossible. Twenty minutes of football would not tire out the players so much, yet if it were a question of demonstrating clearly a superior brand of football, 20 minutes could not decide the matter as sharply as a regular football game could. There would be alibis from the routers of the losing team.

As for the financial side, games in five different large stadia would certainly attract greater crowd than any number of games in two stadia. Most Big Ten colleges situated near large cities, and the conference officials would certainly arrange a schedule that would attract the largest crowds.

A championship game in the Michigan stadium, a semi-championship game in the Ohio State or Northwestern stadium would certainly attract a large number of customers. Nor are the other stadia in the Big Ten exactly what one would call "small."

All in all, although the plan adopted by the eastern colleges is praiseworthy, we do not believe it would be a success in the Big Ten. It is a question of straight football versus abbreviated, theatrical football. If the championship of the middle west, perhaps of the nation, is to be decided in a charity game, why not make it a full game and give the spectators their money's worth?

She still has her lipstick and uses it in public. She has, fortunately, not yet taken up with the more masculine, and therefore more respectable, cigar, but she still smokes cigarettes, and in such volume that some smokers in their advertising find it worth their while to appeal to her exclusively. With a wry face, so I am told, she even continues to sip her bad gin.

Perhaps, so we are told, the face isn't so wry, the gin not so bad. But to go back to Mr. Gauss, who goes back to the flapper in his very next paragraph, "she" and her young male friends, curiously enough, so heavily under fire a few years ago, are the only ones who seem to have escaped the depression.

"They could," the dean continues commendingly, "were they ill mannered enough to do so, stand off and thumb their noses at their elders and in their turn say: 'Whose civilization is collapsing now?' It would be unfair to say that they rejoice in the general misfortune. It is, however, true that in this war of generations, of the old against the young, the roles are reversed and a counter attack has begun."

But there are deeper currents, so to speak, in the stream of present day youthful minds, represented in a "new internationalism," the spirit that brought undergraduates at Harvard and Cornell recently into controversy with alumni and parents over the inclusion of names of all war dead, Allied and "enemy" heroes, in the war memorial, just so long as they were former students and alumni.

Another straw in the stream of undergraduate opinion, the writer observes, points to a kindred realism in dealing with foreign or domestic politics and with sex. "Companionate marriage, the divine right of kings, capitalism, sovietism, are being tested out by the same dispassionate yardstick."

"But what has this to do with the flapper we left at the roadhouse?" asks the dean. Aha, in the general depression, her stock has also touched a new low. There is a new morality on foot, and she is out of it. She is no longer a consideration in the new matter of morals... so they say...

Explanation of Yesterday's Cartoon. The flattest thing in the world. The optical glass produced in a Camden Town factory, London, England, has been called the most perfect in the world, by eminent physicists in the science of glass making, and the firm has acquired a monopoly of such things as "echo-lens" gratings and other optical apparatus requiring perfect optical surfaces. In order to test a surface for flatness, it is laid upon a "proof-plate" of the required flatness and viewed by the light of the mercury lamp. Any irregularity of shape is immediately revealed by irregularities in the Newton's rings formed between the plates. The final testing apparatus is called the "phenika," which again uses interference fringes for discovering irregularities of optical thickness. The instrument maps out the slab in contour line, the steps being a quarter wavelength of light, or about a 200,000th of an inch. An expert operator can gauge unevenness within a ten-millionth of an inch. The finished glass plates are used to build up echelon gratings for spectroscopic purposes, and as flat mirrors in large Newtonian reflector telescopes and other optical apparatus requiring the formation of a perfect virtual image. Behind the Scenes in Hollywood By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Oct. 19.—Motion pictures and the stock market have made Rod La Rocque a rich man. Today, in scant retirement, he devotes his time to scientific work. Rod is no dilettante, either. The famous Dr. Robert Millikan is his good friend. Many distinguished men of science are guests at his home. Right now Rod is building a telescope for Conrad Nagel's little daughter, Ruth. Within the last six days he has spent $4 hours, and 20 minutes grinding the speculum, which will magnify 192 times. Before the instrument is finished, an ordinary Ford axle will be put to use in some mysterious fashion. This is the fourth telescope Rod has made. One similar to his present model is set up at his mountain cabin. The mechanics of photography are another hobby of Rod's. He builds cameras as handily as the average man changes film. Vilma Banky, now completely resigned to retirement from pictures, helps in the laboratory. She is an expert at handling a woodlathe. It is rather remarkable that Rod has educated himself in science. In his boyhood, lack of money prevented him even from finishing high school. Would he like to go back into pictures? Perhaps. But in the meanwhile, he has his hobby to rescue him from boredom. PROFESSIONAL PRIDE. They are telling about a panhandler who asked a Hollywood actor to give him a dime for coffee. Just as he reached into his pocket, the actor looked across the street and saw a sign: "Coffee, 5 cents." He handed the man a nickel and pointed to the sign. "See that over there?" he said. "You won't need a dime." "Okay," sneered the panhandler. "Give me the nickel, but don't tell me how to run my business." AND NOT SO MUCH OF THAT. It was Harry Brand who said that two of the original song writers are still out here, and they are still writing—insurance. NILS TO WORK. One hears that Nils Asther will at last get a part when M. G. M. starts Buster Keaton's new picture, "The Cardboard Lover." Nils will play the same role he had in Marion Davies' version of the play. This Swedish actor had one of the champion bad breaks in Hollywood. Almost a star in the silent films, he did a complete fadeout in the talkies. But Irving Thalberg insists he can come back, and Irving is seldom wrong. DID YOU KNOW. That Lil Dagova's real name is Lilith Witt and that she was born in Java, Dutch East Indies? Her father was a German and her mother of French Huguenot descent. That Edna May Oliver is a descendant of John Quincy Adams? That Edmund Gouin and Marilyn Miller once did an adagio dance in a New York revue?

Speaker Says Religion Can Answer 'Why'

Rev. C. E. Jefferson Gives Homecoming Vesper Talk

"Religion can help us by answering our ultimate questions," was the answer to the subject question "What can religion do for us?" which formed the theme of a Homecoming vesper address by the Rev. Charles E. Jefferson Sunday evening at Iowa Union.

"Religion shall never die. Its great consoling power will prevent it from ever passing away," the speaker told his listeners.

See Religion in Future

"I see no future for our republic without the power of religion," was his statement. Expressing the thought that science and art were capable of telling the "how" of many things, but that they can never answer the question "why?" the Rev. Mr. Jefferson told his audience "Religion gives a sense of direction; it gives us power to evaluate man, not in the terms of his body composition, but in terms of a body that can think, has hopes, and suffers remorse."

Pastor of Broadway Tabernacle

The Rev. Mr. Jefferson was for 30 years pastor of Broadway tabernacle, New York city.

The university chorus and orchestra united to present musical selections for the vesper service. The Rev. W. P. Lemon, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, was chairman for the evening meeting, and President Walter A. Jessup introduced the speaker.

University Men to Start Search for Lost Iowa Folk Lore, Culture; Will Work Under English Department

Folk lore of Iowa's hundred years—ancient ballads and popular songs, strange beliefs and superstitions passed from generation to generation—is being recorded by two University of Iowa men.

Under direction of Prof. John W. Ashton of the department of English, Earl J. Stout, G. of Cedar Falls, is in the midst of a compilation of a hitherto practically neglected phase of Iowa culture.

Students Enlisted High school students have been enlisted as aides in the project, for the university men have circulated scores of schools with the expectation that pupils will submit material which has been in their families down through the years, Professor Ashton declared. Many of these centuries old, English ballads survive within the state, he said, and there also are many valuable songs which have been transmitted orally through singing schools of half a century ago.

Plan Expansion The project eventually will be expanded to include contributions from communities with a large foreign population, such as the Scandinavians in northeast Iowa and the Dutch within a radius of Pella.

Pilgrimages in quest of material have been made at intervals by Stout and will be continued during the Christmas vacation period.

Hawkeyes Start Drill for Minnesota Game Saturday; Reserves Scrimmage

Light Signal Workout for First Team

Brief Punting Practice; Randahl Hickman to Play

With his regular lineup determined, Coach Burton Ingwersen turned his attention to the development of reserves yesterday afternoon as the Hawkeye squad began preparations for the Minnesota game Saturday.

First stringers were dismissed after brief signal drill while the reserves were split up into two teams and run through scrimmage.

The Iowans emerged from their opening conference engagement with Indiana last Saturday in better condition than have been in all season. Randahl Hickman, backfield star who was taken out of the Hoosier game twice because of his injured ankle, was back at his post.

Leave Thursday
Jerry Kriz, Howard Moffitt, and Christian Schmidt were sent through a punting drill as Ingwersen sought to strengthen the squad in that department of the game, the only one in which they were outclassed last Saturday.

The Hawkeyes will leave Thursday night for Minneapolis.

The game—the twenty-fifth in Iowa-Minnesota rivalry—recalls a host of memories. The first encounter was staged in 1901 with the Gophers registering a 16 to 0 triumph. After suffering five losses at the hands of the Northerners, Iowa won its first victory 6 to 0 in 1918.

Two Thrillers
For four successive games prior to 1929, the Hawkeyes whipped the Minnesotans. Following a setback in 1923, Iowa came back in 1924 to win and then lose four straight by lopsided scores.

Oscar Pape was the hero of the thrilling triumphs 7 to 6 in 1928 and 9 to 7 in 1929. Last year was the first time in 16 years that the teams did not clash.

Burdick Flashes Old Form in Drill

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 19 (AP)—Quentin Burdick, Minnesota's injured backfield blocker, today surprised the whole Gopher football camp by romping around the field in practice as though nothing at all ailed him.

Burdick, out of active duty since the Oklahoma A. & M. game two weeks ago, got in his first work since his knee was injured in that contest. Playing in signal drill with a team consisting of regulars and reserves, he ran about the field with his customary spirit. He is protected with a brace for the bad knee.

George Champlin, smallest of the Gophers, was a big figure in football terms today. On the receiving end of My Uhl's passes, he made several long gains in a forward pass during scrimmage in preparation for the Iowa game.

IN CONFERENCE GRID CAMPS

BADGER REGULARS REST
MADISON, Wis., Oct. 19 (AP)—Coach Glenn Thistlethwaite gave his first string Badger football squad a breathing spell today after their hard game with Purdue and sent the second, third and fourth teams through a long scrimmage to pick promising varsity reserve material. Two scrimmages will precede the varsity's departure Thursday for the sectional game with Pennsylvania at Philadelphia. Except for minor bruises and bumps, the Badgers came through the Purdue game without injuries.

INDIANA RESERVES WORK
BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Oct. 19 (AP)—Dissatisfied with Indiana's scoreless tie with Iowa and laying the cause to reserve material that failed in a pinch Coach Hayes today held a lengthy workout for the substitutes who made the trip but saw little or no action in the game. Future use of the offensive to function is expected to bring about a changed lineup especially in the backfield. With the injured Sabik ready for competition, Hayes likely will attempt to build a passing attack around the sophomore star.

WOLVERINES EYE ILLINOIS
ANN ARBOR, Mich., Oct. 19 (AP)—University of Michigan's football squad and coaches today started worrying about Illinois. The squad was deprived of its usual rest after Saturday's defeat and the entire squad went through a strenuous scrimmage. Tackling and blocking were emphasized. Several of the men in both departments contributed to Ohio's victory. Tesser called signals in place of Newman and Hewitt, erstwhile end, was at fullback. Halfback Fay was out with injuries.

ILLINI HOPEFUL
CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Oct. 18 (AP)—Illinois today started priming for its Homecoming battle with Michigan Saturday, hopeful and almost confident that the Wolverines will be beaten. Coach Bob Zuppke scouted the Ohio State-Michigan game and immediately went to work on the Illini offense. Gil Berry, injured in the Bradley game last week, is expected to be back in condition by Saturday.

WILDCATS POLISH OFFENSE
EVANSTON, Ill., Oct. 18 (AP)—Northwestern today plunged into preparation for Saturday's contest with Ohio State, with Coach Hanley seeking to inject smoothness and direction into his offense. The Wildcats showed all kinds of power against California of Los Angeles last week, but fumbles and general raggedness kept them from taking advantage of

Sportively Speaking

By Matt Melchiorre

In the two weeks absence from the Iowa stadium, the Old Gold football team showed enough improvement to warrant the eleven's finishing higher in the Big Ten standings than it did last fall.

The team as a whole worked beautifully against the Hoosiers, the pass defense especially is worthy of commendation. The Pitt game saw our ball carriers trying to advance without any semblance of interference to clear the way. Saturday the reverse was true. Captain Sansen was particularly effective in taking out would-be tacklers.

The tackle posts were just about the strongest spots in the Iowa line. Jerry Foster and Tullio DellaVedova showed up well in their first real test before the home folks. Remember the instance when both men charged through and smeared a Hoosier ball carrier a few yards behind the line of scrimmage?

The backfield was somewhat slowed down by Hickman's injured ankle. Hickman is the man Ingwersen depends mostly in carrying the ball, and Saturday he did not get away for any large gains. Jerry Kriz and Sansen advanced the piskin consistently as did Howard Moffitt.

Four games within the conference, scheduled for Saturday ought to give grid fans a definite idea as to the positions the eleven will finish in the Big Ten race.

In the principal contest Ohio State entertains Hanley's Wildcats at Columbus. The University of Iowa travels to Minnesota, Illinois faces Michigan and Purdue's Boilermakers tackle the Hoosiers. Wisconsin and Chicago trek eastward to Pennsylvania where the Badgers face Pennsylvania in the City of Brotherly Love, and the Maroons play Carnegie Tech at Pittsburgh.

Iowa City Hi Prepares for Junction Team

Iowa City high football squad went through a long session last night at Shrader field in preparation for the contest with Columbus Junction here Saturday afternoon.

Coach Wells changed the men around, sending Cleatus Stimmel to the line and using Mutchler in Stimmel's place. Kimmel alternated with Iseensee at center. After giving the team new plays, the Hawkelets' mentor scrimmaged the first and second elevens.

Co-captain Iseensee, who wrenched his knee in the contest at Clinton, did not take part in the scrimmage. Hen Soucek, with a sprained ankle, was on the sidelines.

The first team lined up with Stimmel, Marech, McCray, Iseensee, Kimmel, Riecke, and Reed in the line, while Brown, Yetter, Mutchler and Ersland cavorted in the backfield.

University Hi Squad Begins Preparation for Williamsburg

Scheduled to meet Williamsburg in a non-conference game here Saturday, the U high football players held only a light drill last night.

Coach Joy Kistler took up most of the time working on weaknesses shown in the game with Monticello here Friday which the locals lost 6 to 0. Passes came in for some attention.

The full squad is now reporting for practice and Kistler plans to give special attention to the offensive of the Blue and White. Nothing is known of the power the Williamsburg team may have, so the local mentor plans to have his strongest lineup in condition for the game.

St. Pat's Gridders Hold Light Workout; Play in Parlor City

Resting after their 27 to 0 defeat at the hands of the Tipton football team, St. Patrick's eleven took only a light workout yesterday. Only about half of the men were present.

Coach Louis Loria stressed blocking and tackling, these being the glaring weaknesses revealed in the Tipton contest. Several of the men were badly bruised in the game, but there were no serious injuries.

The St. Pat's gridders travel to Cedar Rapids Friday, where they will tangle with the Immaculate Conception team of that city.

Grant, (Cedar Rapids) at Davenport.
Columbus Junction at Iowa City.

The two games in the Mississippi Valley conference this week bring the conference leaders into action. Dubuque, tied with Davenport for top place in the conference standings, will play at Clinton Friday night in Clinton's Homecoming game. Clinton's chances for a victory rest on its ability to stop Berwanger, star Dubuque halfback.

The other conference game will be at Davenport Saturday afternoon when Grant of Cedar Rapids will try to set back the undefeated Davenport eleven. Davenport will have an interesting afternoon trying to get thru the Grant defense as that is where Grant is strong. Its opponents have scored but seven points in three games.

Hawkelets Annual Game
Iowa City plays out of the conference this week. They entertain Columbus Junction Saturday afternoon. This is an annual affair of long standing and always is a tough battle.

Washington of Cedar Rapids is taking a rest this week to get in shape for the rest of their schedule. In the feature battle of last week, Dubuque defeated Washington of Cedar Rapids by a score of 19 to 8.

Clinton won its first conference victory last week by defeating Iowa City 6-0. Lenard went through guard in the first quarter for 12 yards and a touchdown after Gill brought the ball down the field on a long end run. Iowa City threatened in the third frame but lost the ball on downs on Clinton's two yard line.

Grant Ties Waterloo
Grant of Cedar Rapids in a non-conference game played a scoreless tie with East Waterloo. For Grant the offensive work of Krumbholtz and the kicking of Seels looked good. Huston, sub-quarter, taking the place of Mortier, who was sick, played a steady game.

Coach George Bresnahan sent the men over the four mile route for distance work and then wound up the drill with a fast quarter mile. Practice will continue until Friday when the team will accompany the football squad to Minneapolis.

DIXIE DUGAN—

By J. P. McEvoy and J. H. Striebel

Missie was still sleeping when at 8 o'clock Adelaide left the house, and half an hour later she was standing outside Wesley's door, knocking steadily. She had been admitted to the house, at least. The maid had stared at her curiously, but otherwise everything seemed peaceful enough. In the boy's room she could hear the nurse giving Eddie his breakfast.

Synopsis of preceding installments: Missie Colfax is married off at 20 to Wesley Dexter, gay, florid, 33. He soon tires of her and holds nothing for her, she meets Kirby Phelps. Suddenly they realize that they are in love. But Missie learns that she is going to have a child, and she puts Kirby Phelps out of her life. When her son is born, she devotes herself to him, and tries to make her marriage a success. The brief truce is soon broken, however, and, after a violent quarrel, she leaves her husband, and goes to her grandmother's home. She is utterly wretched. Most of her life has been unhappy. She was the daughter of Stella, a burlesque actress, and Lambert Colfax, a member of an aristocratic family. Colfax deserted his wife and, after futile attempts at reconciliation, she killed herself. Then Missie went to live with her grandmother, old Mrs. Colfax, and her Aunt Adelaide. The dull, formal atmosphere of the Colfax home stifled Missie. From her father's Uncle Archibald she learned that her step-grandfather is old Mrs. Colfax's favorite. Adelaide submits to parental tyranny, and Cecily, another daughter, has been disinherited. During these years Missie had been cut off from all her old acquaintances, and only now and then saw her step-sister, Ellen, who, after marrying Tommy Wilkins, became Eileen.

Missie was still sleeping when at 8 o'clock Adelaide left the house, and half an hour later she was standing outside Wesley's door, knocking steadily. She had been admitted to the house, at least. The maid had stared at her curiously, but otherwise everything seemed peaceful enough. In the boy's room she could hear the nurse giving Eddie his breakfast. "Now drink your orange juice like that's a good boy." Adelaide slowly climbed the stairs and knocked. "Who is it?" "It's Adelaide Colfax, Wesley." He opened the door almost at once, an angry man before she spoke. She saw his face, the blue ridge across his temple, and her carefully prepared arguments died in her throat. "If you've come from Missie, you can go back to her again. I've had enough." She mustered her courage, followed him, closed the door against the servants. "Wesley, you must let her come back. You must." "Why? So she can try to kill me again?" "That was an accident, an impulse. I'm sure she's sorry. Wesley, I can't keep her. I can't tell her. It would kill her." He looked at her. She represented all that he detested, failure, gentled poverty, ugliness, but she was a lady, and he passionately wanted to be a gentleman. His voice was more polite. "I'm sorry, Adelaide," he said. "This has nothing to do with you, or with your mother either. There was no reason whatever for what Missie did last night, and no question of forgiveness." "You won't take her back?" "I am seeing MacDonald this morning." "Of course, I'm going back. If Wesley will have me," she said. "Now just go to bed and don't worry." But Adelaide lay in her bed, struggling to overcome the inertia of years of subservience. She was not so certain that Wesley would take Missie back, and if he did not, what would they do? She had nobody to turn to, nobody. She thought with bitterness of Lambert, a constant drain on their resources, of Cecily, ill now and even in her despair. Alone in Missie's room she packed a bag for her, got a hat, gloves. When she got back, it was to find that Missie was ill. She was ill for three days, hidden in her room. She would make desperate attempts to get up, only to collapse again. Adelaide warned the servants came and went. She brought broths, milk, fresh water. And on the third day, Missie being better, she told her in detail of that talk with Wesley. Missie, however, was more hopeful. She had had time to think. Wesley would want no scandal, no divorce court. True, divorce was becoming more common; divorced people were not necessarily ostracized any longer. He might figure on that. But his life had been organized as he liked it; he had been comfortable, free. If she went back, absented herself, surely he would let her stay. So the next day, still weak, she started back. She would plead, she would suffer any humiliation; but she must not lose Eddie. Her face was set as she left the house. But her eyes were the eyes of a frightened child as she rang the bell. When the maid opened the door, she had difficulty in controlling her voice. She stepped inside, into her own house; the maid took the bag. "Has Mr. Dexter left for the office?" "Mr. Dexter's out of town, mam." "Then I'll go up to Master Eddie." The girl was watching her curiously. "Master Eddie's gone, mam." "Gone?" she said. "Gone where?" "I don't know, mam. Mr. Dexter sent him and the nurse to the country somewhere." She went up stairs, her mind obstinately refusing to work. In the nursery she found herself doing small automatic things, picking up toys, gathering small garments and putting them away. Once this had been her home, sanctuary for Eddie and herself. Now it was nothing but her. Eddie was gone. Wesley had taken him away from her. Where could he go? What could she do? She needed help, help and love. Somebody to care. Somebody to get Eddie back. It was then that she thought of Kirby Phelps. Kirby found her in the sitting room of an ugly hotel suite. "Don't be surprised, Kirby," she said. "I don't know, I don't know, I don't know. I think I am stark raving mad." "Nonsense." He went to her and put his hands on her shoulders. "Steady now, Missie. I don't care what happened, you are no more mad than I am. When did you eat last?" "I don't know. This morning, I think." "Then you're going to have something now. And not a word out of you until you have it." That attitude of his helped her. She even smiled a little. He put her in a chair, hooked back the curtains so she could have air, sent for a waiter, and talked about trivial matters until he came. But he was confused, filled with pity and tenderness, puzzled. She had left Wesley, left her child, came to him, and he still cared for her. He had filled his life with other matters, but she had still that curious power to stir his heart. She had come to him. Well, he would keep her this time. They were still young. They could still build a life together. There would be a bad interval, and then— "When the waiter had gone, he went over to her and said, "Better now?" "Quiter, yes. I was frightened." "There is nothing to be frightened about, Missie. You are safe with me." He stooped and kissed her, a brief, reassuring caress, no more. But she could not eat. She drank some coffee, got up. "Let me walk around while I'm telling you, Kirby. It helps." "Do anything you like. You've left Wesley?" "He has left me, and he has taken Eddie." "Left you?"

"I struck him. I told you I was crazy. It hit him with a poker and knocked him down. I thought I had killed him, and I didn't care. But I hadn't." "That's a pity," he said dryly. But when he saw that that shocked her. "Go on then what?" She told him, clearly enough but still moving about the room. Only when it came to her decision to come to him did he stop her. "Just why did you come to me, Missie? Think that over as quietly as you can. Was it only because you needed help?" She flushed, but she looked at him candidly. "Partly that. Not only that." "You still cared, then?" "I have never changed, Kirby." But when she came to Eddie her forced calmness left her. She became the mother again, desperate, trembling. She wanted Eddie, she must have him. He had not been well; the nurse was stupid and not very kind. Let him get Eddie for her, go back and find him, steal him. If he would do that, she would promise to stay with him. She didn't matter anyhow. She would say with him, love him, be his slave. When he left her she was quieter. She promised him to try to sleep. But as he closed the door on her in that dark room he had a feeling of desertion. She would not sleep; she would lie there alone, agonizing. He made a move to go back, squared his shoulders, went on. Until midnight he walked the streets. He had no belief that he could get Eddie for her. He saw Wesley, sullen and ugly, using his wealth to prevent that, to soil her and drag her down; and he saw her making her pitiful losing fight alone. Then what was he to do? Give her some good advice and send her back to that brute? Or hold her? At midnight he found himself across from the hotel, looking up at her windows. Her lights were going. She was not asleep; she was up there, brooding, maybe crying. If ever she needed him it was now. He was going up to her. And up he went. She was in her nightgown, a thin dressing gown over it, her hair braided in its two long braids. And it was his first words which precipitated the crisis. "You look like a little girl, darling." Then the storm broke. Throughout that insane, hysterical night Kirby kept his head. At first he considered it the nervous reaction following her long hours of strain; later on he was to realize that it was far deeper than that, that a thousand early inhibitions, temporarily repressed by her desperation, were fighting him. She "wanted to be good." She didn't want Eddie to be "ashamed of her." He was helpless. Indeed he saw that this attitude of hers was fundamental, a part of her. If she sowed the wind, she would indeed reap the whirlwind. His great fear was that she would hate and loathe him later on. Toward morning she was calmer. She told him little things about her life, things he had never known. It was a curious situation, but she seemed to feel no strangeness in it. What mattered to her was her essential integrity and that preserved, he saw that it comforted her to talk to him of these small, long ago matters. One thing worried her. She was afraid he would think she did not care for him. Over and over she told him that she loved him, told him quietly but intensely. And she asked him to care for her as much as he could. She could get along better, if she felt that he loved her. "But what are you going to do, Missie, darling? I can't let you go back like this." She was not sure. She only knew she could not stay with him. She had come on an impulse. She had wanted him to help her get Eddie, and then to help her to rear him. "He will need somebody like you, Kirby. He's got to grow up decent and fine." He kissed her hand at that. But she saw now that she had gone about things the wrong way. She

And so she left him, going back to she knew not what. He wanted to go with her, but she preferred going by herself. Left alone, he was worried and despondent, blamed himself, wondered what she would do, where she would go. But the great blow was that he had lost her. Whether by his own bungling or by that malicious destiny which had twice brought them together and twice separated them, he did not know. He had lost her. Move Scene of Operations to Burlington

Move 300 Troops to Protect Testers in New Area

Troop "I" 113th cavalry regiment, station at Iowa City, will entrain for Burlington tonight to aid troops in Des Moines county in connection with cattle testing, reports received last night said.

Approximately 50 men and their mounts will make the trip. The troop was mobilized last night at the Legion building for instruction.

Burglars Enter Bank by Sawing Hole in Roof; Efforts in Vain

NORWAY, Oct. 19 (AP)—

County and state officials were searching today for burglars who entered the Benton County Savings bank Sunday night by sawing a hole in the roof.

One safe, which contained no money, was opened, but the heavy construction of the second safe, containing between $3,000 and $4,000 withstood the efforts of the burglars.

Officials believe the group to be the same that entered banks at Montour and Chelsea recently because entrances to the three banks were effected in the same manner.

Banks Contest Levied Taxes

Declare Overtaxing by Iowa Officials; to Hear Counsel

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19 (AP)—The Iowa-Des Moines National and the Central State banks of Des Moines, in the supreme court today challenged a discriminatory tax imposed on them by Polk county, Ia., for 1919 to 1922, inclusive.

The cases were reached shortly before the court adjourned for the day. J. G. Gamble, counsel for the banks, made a brief statement of the nature of the taxes.

The banks asserted that the taxes levied on them were many times greater than assessed competing moneyed capital in the hands of individuals. Iowa officials were declared by the banks to "intentionally, habitually, systematically and arbitrarily" overtax them.

Counsel for the county officials will be heard tomorrow. Their attitude is that the proceedings are barred by the statute of limitations and that the banks, instead of taking the matter into the courts, should have contested the taxes before the board of review.

The county officials have asserted that the taxes in controversy have been distributed and used, and that the banks had aided other taxpayers in evading taxes in the county and therefore did not come into court with clean hands.

The petitions, which were filed separately by the banks, challenge the validity of the law under which the taxes were assessed.

Radio Communication

Also subject to mobilization is a platoon of signalmen from the headquarters troop of the 113th cavalry.

They will establish radio communication from the field with headquarters in Burlington from the Des Moines county maneuvers.

General Bailey said that cavalrymen will be used in the fourth anti-testing sector in order to guard against delay occasioned by inclement weather, as was the case last week in Henry county. Brig. Gen. Park A. Findley will be in command of the troops at the new camp, which was being selected today by Col. James Thomas.

Plans call for the completion of testing in Henry county early Tuesday morning.

Move Troopers From Henry County

MT. PLEASANT, Oct. 19 (AP)—Iowa national guardmen and veterinarians have protected while testing cattle in Henry county tonight were preparing to lay siege to another anti-cow-testing sector in Des Moines county.

Tentative orders have been issued for the transfer of 300 troopers to Burlington either Tuesday night or Wednesday, from Henry county, third battlefield in the war against the state law requiring the tuberculin testing of cattle.

Dr. Peter Malcomb, supervisor of the tests, said that in Baldwin township, scene of several disorders by farmers opposing the tests and the presence of the troopers, only three cows reacting to the tuberculin were found in the 116 herds inoculated.

Quiet prevailed as work was completed in this county, but some objections repeated their previous statements that damage will appear later among their cows.

One week after F. F. Rogers, fire prevention expert, told the members of the chamber of commerce that they were people of a careless state and that 60 per cent of the deaths caused by fire were the results of carelessness, and could have been prevented, R. E. Rhoades, manager of the Eastern Iowa and the Iowa Automobile associations, told the organization that their state led the union in the number of persons killed and injured last year through automobile accidents.

Mr. Rhoades spoke to the chamber of commerce at its Monday luncheon as a part of the safety program which is being undertaken in Iowa City.

He pointed out that 32,000 people were killed and 600,000 injured by automobiles last year but, for the most part, nothing has been done to prevent a recurrence of the number.

You Can Hang Up That Depression Suit—

clothes prices are BACK TO FIFTEEN YEARS AGO

Thousands and thousands of men are handicapped today because they haven't been able to buy the good clothes that are so important to success

Although clothes have been gradually lowering in price they haven't come down to the point where they're in keeping with present day incomes

So somebody had to step in and do something about it—pull prices down regardless. And Hart Schaffner and Marx decided to be that SOME-BODY

They argued this way. The country needs clothes badly—good clothes that make money do thrifty work. We are going to offer them at prices that fit 1931 pocketbooks. The only thing that will get us out with a whole skin is to get such great extra volume that the extreme arbitrary price reductions will take care of themselves

We believe that the American people want quality, will buy quality they believe in if it fits their prices, and that they will welcome a move like this. At any rate we're in it up to our eyes and we're going to have a lot of fun keeping extra people busy, and putting good clothes on people who couldn't buy them before—and maybe that's reward enough.

WILLIAMS Power-Full COAL

Low cost is not always economy. Nor is high cost. But true economy comes from a reasonably priced product, high in quality. That's why burning Williams Power-Full Coal is real economy. High in heat giving units—high in carbon content—few ashes—little smoke and soot.

A coal that is all coal. You don't buy waste. Try it and be convinced.
