

Squires Hides From Mob in Newfoundland

Police Repulse Crowd Trying to Break Into Depot

ST. JOHNS, N. F., April 6 (AP)—While Sir Richard Squires, Newfoundland's prime minister, remained in hiding from an angry populace, war veterans and municipal police late today repulsed a mob which sought to break into the government's main depot.

Rope Off Street

The street was roped off and by nightfall the veterans and police appeared to have the situation well in hand.

Family Safe

The prime minister's son, Richard, Jr., announced at Halifax receipt of a cablegram from his sister, Blaine, assuring him all was well with members of the family.

Ask Investigation

The disturbances followed upon delay in admitting a deputation to present a resolution in the assembly asking "proper investigation" of Cashin's charges that Sir Richard had falsified minutes of council to divert public funds to political accounts.

Inmates of Missouri Penitentiaries Take Courses in Spanish

"Spanish is one of the most popular subjects taught in the prisons of Missouri, because the prisoners contemplate going to South America after they are released," said Prof. C. L. Lovell of the chemistry department in a speech on "Education in Missouri penal institutions," at a luncheon of the faculty of the college of engineering.

One Doctor in 100 Becomes Wealthy, Says C. G. Smith

Only one doctor out of every 100 becomes wealthy practicing medicine. Ten become well to do, 50 make a good living, 30 get by, four feel the pinch of poverty and five drop medicine for various reasons.

Large fees charged by specialists, Dr. Smith believes, will ultimately cause a trend toward the general practitioner.

Pastor Administers Last Rites to Own Mother Unknowingly

ERIE, Pa., April 6 (AP)—Kneeling in an ambulance, the Rev. Lawrence Trembley administered the last rites of his church to a woman, named beyond recognition by an automobile.

She died a few minutes later. And Father Trembley hurried back to St. Joseph's orphanage, where his mother, Mrs. Joseph Trembley, 56, had visited him since she came here recently from Holyoke, Mass.

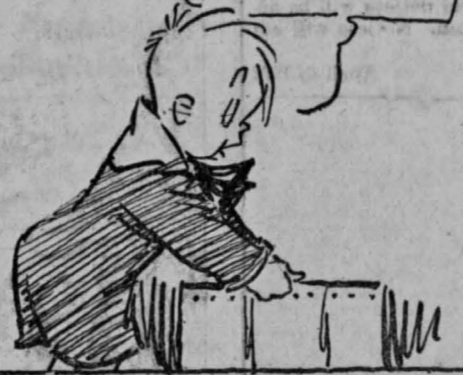

But Father Trembley waited in vain. Then a friend called him to the morgue. Father Trembley looked again upon the victim of the motor car and fell to his knees with a sob: "Mother!"

Woman Shaking Off "Weaker" Title

STELLA WALSH CORA LIVINGSTON BABE DIDRIKSON MAYELLE REICHERT

WASHINGTON—While the Women's bureau at the capital and the American Alliance of Civil Service Women are trying to decide whether or not married women will be allowed to hold jobs during the depression, the women themselves, apparently unperturbed by the turmoil, are going right on working.

Married or single, the woman of today has proved that she has a will of her own and if she wants to hold a job she'll do it regardless of what is decided at conventions and congresses.

This may appear selfish at first glance, as some employed women do not really need to work. But a large percentage of them do need employment and would probably starve if it were taken away from them.

Another woman who boldly invaded man's domain and is getting away with it is 15 year old Anneliese Schmidt, of Berlin, Germany. The fraulein decided she'd rather be a mechanic than a stenographer, so she works in garages instead of offices and is an able hand with a monkey wrench.

The vigorous sport of wrestling was once believed to be one of man's stamping grounds that would remain inviolate, but that belief, too, has been shattered. Cora Livingston, of Cambridge, Mass., is all upset because Mlle. Sandra Porter, of France, and Mlle. Zitti Zambelli, of Italy, are making a joint claim on the world's wrestling championship.

The two women recently wrestled to a draw in a contest advertised as a championship bout. But Cora insists she can down either of them.

The fact seems to be, as a distinguished British author puts it, we are breeding our women harder and our men softer. This author made his observation after a visit to America, where he professed himself amazed at the Amazon-like women and the large number of effeminate men.

A brief review of some of our women athletes elicits some amazing information about the "weaker" sex. There is Stella Walsh, the sensational girl runner of Cleveland, Ohio, who can cover the 100 yards in 10.8 seconds, a mark considered good by most male sprinters. Then there is Babe Didrikson of Texas, who not only set world's marks in the broad jump and 80-meter hurdle race, but can throw a baseball 238 feet, 10 inches, or a javelin 133 feet, 5 1/2 inches. In fact, one could go on and on enumerating performances of women that might well be envied by husky men athletes.

Pharmacy Students Manufacture Drugs Under Supervision

Liquid drugs by the gallon, and solids by the pound are manufactured in the university's college of pharmacy for use in the institution's hospitals.

The preparations are made with a saving of many dollars of quantity production and scientific laboratory methods, according to Dean Wilber J. Teeters.

Some of the items and amounts produced during the past year are: elixirs, 30 gallons; antiseptic gargle, 800 gallons; milk of magnesia, 50 gallons; mercurial and zinc oxide ointments, 200 pounds; liquid soap, 4,300 gallons; massage cold cream, 300 pounds.

Most of the manufacturing work is done by pharmacy students, under rigid supervision of faculty members.

Executive Outlines Campfire History

Emphasizing the fact that the Campfire Girls' organization develops initiative, high ideals, and steadfastness in the adolescent girl, Wilma Rayburn, attorney at law and local campfire executive in Grinnell, gave general suggestions regarding the organization to the recreational leadership class last night at the women's gymnasium.

Miss Rayburn outlined the history of the Campfire Girls, and told of its founding in the home of Luther H. Gullick. She explained how the organization stresses the relationship between mother and daughter, and places the emphasis on the home.

Family Offers $100 Reward in Attempt to Find Lost Youth

DECORAH, April 6 (AP)—The family of Glen Amdahl today offered a $100 reward for information leading to the finding of the youth, who disappeared late Saturday night.

Under the supervision of Sheriff Mike C. Graf of Winneshiek county, searches continued to drag the upper Iowa river near here in the belief that the young Ossian farmer was drowned.

The sheriff indicated, however, that he believed further dragging of the storm would be fruitless.

Young Amdahl was last seen Saturday after he had told his parents he was going to a show in Decorah and would be back in four hours. His automobile and several possessions were found near the Decorah high school, about a mile from the river.

TODAY'S TOPICS

By FRANK JAFFE

A message from West Virginia's soft coal mines, where underpaid laborers are an exploited population renting coal company land, buying at excessive prices from coal company stores, and having their furniture dumped from coal company shacks into coal company streets and streams...

A contribution that "There are two attitudes on the college student's relation to politics: One, that he is for four years released from public duty for college purposes—that is the American attitude; the other, that he is to assume what leadership he can—that is the European attitude"...

An appeal to rid the world of its war debts-reparations Frankenstein...

An invitation to "come across the street" and become better acquainted with foreign nations and individuals from them, in the spirit of Victor Hugo's idea of a United States of the World...

A challenge to make American patriotism not "My country, right or wrong," but "My country, if wrong to right her; if right to keep her so"...

These were contributions to a meagre audience by five aspirants for the Jessup oratorical prize Tuesday night—of whom the last, a freshman, will represent Iowa in the Northern Oratorical league. They represent not only able speech training but student thought on problems of broad significance. And, however meagre the attendance in competition with studies and spring, there is cause for congratulation in the participation of the hundred or so, particularly that by the survivors of oratorical candidates. The pertinence of debate activity to national and world citizenship could well command greater attention on the campus.

"Banking in the United States is not a profession," Prof. Max Winkler of New York university told the American Jewish congress in New York this week. And furthermore, he added, it never has been!

"Anyone with enough money to pay the Superintendent of Banks for a charter started a bank. It was so easy that men left gainful occupations to become bankers. Many of our co-religionists who were doing so well in the cloak and suit business did it.

"Our governments, national and local, are responsible. If someone wants to drive a truck he has to pass an examination. But if he wants to be a banker he does not."

Which all goes to show...

All of which, with other things Professor Winkler said, should interest a nation in which banking is the principal beneficiary of attempts to relieve depression.

In Europe, where bankers are fewer and professional failures were usually the unavoidable product of circumstances. In the United States, as it is not necessary to have a professor of finance and banking tell anybody from Iowa, many failures have been due to shortcomings of bankers, particularly in their banking judgment.

And that is not confined to judgment of real estate values for mortgage purposes, even if that did overshadow other reasons in 1921 and again in 1931.

For the current, now seemingly checked, run of bank closings seems to have been largely the product of international factors. Does that mean U. S. bankers were, like European bankers, the victims of circumstances? They cannot plead the same justifications.

An expert in international finance, familiar with the situation in Europe, visited this campus not long ago. Having to cash a draft at a bank in a city not far from here, he expressed surprise that the teller in charge of foreign drafts should know nothing about the international banking situation, and seemed ignorant that U. S. money tied up in Europe had his own to do with the tightened conditions of his own professional sphere.

There has been the erroneous impression that this country, so powerful, can get along nicely without the rest of the world, thank you, and would you mind leaving your troubles at home? But the lesson of experience has come, after a decade. From it, in the reorganization of banks and banking, should come the notion of a specialty that goes far beyond bookkeeping and loan judgments in a local field.

Trumpeing Through The Neck: The nagas inhabit the hill country of Assam, and wear aprons or petticoats for religious reasons. They are very skillful performers on the Indian flute or trumpet, which they play by pressing the instrument against their necks. The trumpets are so finely constructed that the small quantity of air propelled by the pressure of the neck on the opening of the tube will produce the sound.

ROOSTER-SHAPED MONEY: Kedah, the country of the bizarre rooster-shaped money, is on the west coast of the Malay Peninsula, and covers an area of about 5,000 square miles. The shape of the coin is dictated by some sacred religious symbolism connected with the rooster.

Behind the Scenes in Hollywood

By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD.—You can't tip the younger generation to anything about sex. They're way ahead of you.

So says Ernest Lubitsch, director of sophisticated comedies on the screen. A doughty Don Quixote with a cigar in his mouth, Mr. Lubitsch continues to break lances against the whirring blades of the censors.

The big little director can't abide all this talk about eliminating sex from motion pictures.

"It should not be vulgar, of course," he says. "In comedy it should be used subtly and charmingly. In serious stories, only when arising from dramatic necessity.

"But when you talk about contaminating the young—how ridiculous! All young people today have the facts of life before them every day.

"Well," drawled Bill, "doesn't it get dark any more?"

AND SO TO GOSSIP
Production of Ann Harding's new picture is momentarily halted. The star is at home with a bad throat. Roland Young was in such a hurry to leave for Europe that he forgot his trunk. They had to ship it to him by airplane at $1 per pound. Boris Karloff had a busy time signing autographs at the Kreutzberg dance recital. Mae Murray was another film celebrity there. And according to rumor, Greta Garbo was in the audience. Rochelle Hudson is riding around in a big car with Pat Kaufman, young Harvard law student out here on a vacation. Millard Webb and Mary Eaton are back in town, and to stay. While in Europe, he made two pictures for British Gaumont and she played seven months in the revue, "Folly to Be Wise" . . . Bill Boyd and the Mrs. (Dorothy Sebastian to you) are getting their yacht ready for the summer season.

MR. MIZNER ADVISES
Notoriously easy to touch William Mizner has rebelled at last. The other day an acquaintance called Bill on the phone, "I must have $500," began the familiar story, "and don't know where to get it."

More Air Progress

COMFORT IN air travel will take a big jump when passenger lines begin using the new Ford pullman plane, said to be the outstanding innovation at the national aircraft show in Detroit. Fourteen sizeable rooms have places inside the boat like cabin. The accommodations include standard pullman berths, a kitchen, smoking room, and two washrooms.

Heretofore the possibilities of air travel have been somewhat hampered by the fact that passengers could not sleep aboard the planes, but had to land for the night, or continue their journeys on railroad trains. This mammoth craft, with accommodations for at least 32 persons, does away with a major drawback to long distance air travel.

Ample power for safe flying is furnished by three huge motors which altogether develop 2,540 horsepower. Other notable equipment features of the giant craft are sound insulation, heating equipment, a fire alarm system, and a modern interior. Visibility from the pilot's cockpit has been bettered by changing the position of the front engine.

Adaptation of this new type plane by operators of trunk lines would mean a notable advance in fast transportation. That travel by air is here to stay is beyond doubt. Just a few short years ago people everywhere said that airplanes could not become commercially successful. These people predicted that future for railroad trains and automobiles. The proven feasibility of airplanes is just one more dash of cold water to the mistaken opinions of cranks and doubters.

Safety has been settled for a long time. The average individual nowadays thinks no more of stepping into an airplane for a fast ride than he does of driving an automobile over the highways at half the speed. The item of comfort has, until recently, been more or less subordinated to features of mechanical perfection and speed, but this too has been settled by the new wonder of the air.

Anything for a Winner

(From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch)

One of the principal arguments in favor of college football always has been that it develops those traits of fair dealing, honesty and sportsmanship which prepare the participants for business life.

Now comes the disclosure that Dr. Clarence W. Spears, in accepting the position of head football coach at the University of Wisconsin, broke his contract with the University of Oregon. We consider appropriate, if somewhat restrained, the statement of the Oregon athletic committee that it "regrets Dr. Spears has seen fit to break his contract without first asking to be released from it," and that it looks on the act of Wisconsin and its supporters "as unbecomingly to the best interests of intercollegiate relationships."

Dr. Spears was quoted some time ago as saying that he contemplated leaving Oregon because changes in the university system would weaken his football material. This situation seems to bear out the recurring charge that many major football coaches and athletic councils are more interested in developing winning teams than they are in developing men of character. It certainly is true if the inviolability of the contract is to become a campus jest.

TODAY'S TOPICS

A message from West Virginia's soft coal mines, where underpaid laborers are an exploited population renting coal company land, buying at excessive prices from coal company stores, and having their furniture dumped from coal company shacks into coal company streets and streams...

A contribution that "There are two attitudes on the college student's relation to politics: One, that he is for four years released from public duty for college purposes—that is the American attitude; the other, that he is to assume what leadership he can—that is the European attitude"...

An appeal to rid the world of its war debts-reparations Frankenstein...

An invitation to "come across the street" and become better acquainted with foreign nations and individuals from them, in the spirit of Victor Hugo's idea of a United States of the World...

A challenge to make American patriotism not "My country, right or wrong," but "My country, if wrong to right her; if right to keep her so"...

These were contributions to a meagre audience by five aspirants for the Jessup oratorical prize Tuesday night—of whom the last, a freshman, will represent Iowa in the Northern Oratorical league. They represent not only able speech training but student thought on problems of broad significance. And, however meagre the attendance in competition with studies and spring, there is cause for congratulation in the participation of the hundred or so, particularly that by the survivors of oratorical candidates. The pertinence of debate activity to national and world citizenship could well command greater attention on the campus.

"Banking in the United States is not a profession," Prof. Max Winkler of New York university told the American Jewish congress in New York this week. And furthermore, he added, it never has been!

"Anyone with enough money to pay the Superintendent of Banks for a charter started a bank. It was so easy that men left gainful occupations to become bankers. Many of our co-religionists who were doing so well in the cloak and suit business did it.

"Our governments, national and local, are responsible. If someone wants to drive a truck he has to pass an examination. But if he wants to be a banker he does not."

Which all goes to show...

All of which, with other things Professor Winkler said, should interest a nation in which banking is the principal beneficiary of attempts to relieve depression.

In Europe, where bankers are fewer and professional failures were usually the unavoidable product of circumstances. In the United States, as it is not necessary to have a professor of finance and banking tell anybody from Iowa, many failures have been due to shortcomings of bankers, particularly in their banking judgment.

And that is not confined to judgment of real estate values for mortgage purposes, even if that did overshadow other reasons in 1921 and again in 1931.

For the current, now seemingly checked, run of bank closings seems to have been largely the product of international factors. Does that mean U. S. bankers were, like European bankers, the victims of circumstances? They cannot plead the same justifications.

An expert in international finance, familiar with the situation in Europe, visited this campus not long ago. Having to cash a draft at a bank in a city not far from here, he expressed surprise that the teller in charge of foreign drafts should know nothing about the international banking situation, and seemed ignorant that U. S. money tied up in Europe had his own to do with the tightened conditions of his own professional sphere.

There has been the erroneous impression that this country, so powerful, can get along nicely without the rest of the world, thank you, and would you mind leaving your troubles at home? But the lesson of experience has come, after a decade. From it, in the reorganization of banks and banking, should come the notion of a specialty that goes far beyond bookkeeping and loan judgments in a local field.

Engineering Groups Hear Illinois Man

A. G. Anderson Speaks on Human Fatigue in Factories

Basing his entire lecture on a one year study made at the Hawthorne works of the Western Electric company, A. G. Anderson, professor of industrial management, University of Illinois, yesterday afternoon gave a talk on "Human fatigue among industry," before a joint meeting of the student branches of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the American Society of Electrical Engineers.

Defining human fatigue as the diminished capacity for work resulting from work, Professor Anderson drew a graphic scale to show the fatigue curve in a day's work in a typical large industrial plant. "Mid-forenoon," said the speaker, "is the time of day most likely to draw capacity work from the laborer." Anticipation of the lunch and dinner hour cause a slackening up before these two periods of the day.

Rest Periods Fall

That rest periods do not tend to increase the amount of work done was the contention of the speaker, who last year helped in interviewing more than 10,000 employees, both men and women, in a General Electric plant. "Our investigation," he said, "disclosed that rest periods do not add any incentive to output."

A personal incidental time analysis test was made by the investigators. It was found that out of every hour a laborer would use more than four minutes for his own benefit, and 14 minutes would be spent doing some incidental tinkering with the machine he may have been operating. Women, it was determined, did not take up as much personal time as did men.

Interesting Factor

"Contrary to popular belief," Professor Anderson declared, "monotony of highly mechanized machine work has very little undesirable effect upon the individual, as to fatigue." Ten thousand employees asserted that the weekly pay check was the interesting factor, and they soon became accustomed to disregard monotony.

As monotony — no noise, weather, and highly mechanized tasks, said Professor Anderson. "We find that none of these things have much of a bearing on the emotions of the laborer." Night work, he said, was found to be fully as effective as day work. The speaker intimated, in conclusion, that as time goes on, shorter hours, improved working conditions, and simplicity of the work will probably tend to increase the amount and rate of work which can be industrially accomplished.

An open forum discussion on the lecture topic followed the close of the talk.

Mr. Drummond spent all of the summer two years ago working in the Oklahoma oil fields and consequently drew upon first hand material for his talk. He explained the drilling of wells and the piping of oil from the fields to the production centers, and also discussed the difficulties encountered in the process of drilling.

Paul R. Casady, E3 of Milton, gave a report on, "How a underground sewage plant serves Lake, N. J."

Speakers for the meeting of the group next week are J. R. Lyons, E3 of Aledo, Ill.; Ross N. Brudenell, E3 of Portland, Ore., and H. W. Poston, E4 of Iowa City.

Art Judges to Pick Winners

125 High School Pupils Vie for Proudfoot Scholarship

Judging of entries in the state high school art contest will begin tomorrow at the University of Iowa with the receipt of the last of drawings and paintings from more than 125 pupils.

Champions and other place-winners will receive their awards at a banquet here April 16, after the contest entries have been on display for five days in the Iowa Union.

To the student furnishing the best display of six pieces of work will go the $50 Proudfoot scholarship, entitling the winner to study in the university's department of graphic and plastic arts. Gold, silver, and bronze medals will be awarded to the placewinners in each of the five classes.

The contestants have entered work in these divisions: representation in monochrome, representation in color, figure drawing, design, and lettering and design.

Monochrom high school led all of the others in the 1931 competition, furnishing two champions, and a second and third place winner. East high school of Des Moines had three placewinners, and Roosevelt of Des Moines, Dubuque, Mason City, and Iowa City, two each.

COLEFAX (AP)—Presbyterian ministers of the Des Moines Presbytery were meeting here to choose a successor to the Rev. George G. Bruce of Okaloosa, moderator.

"Well, I De-Claire!"

"I'm utterly flabbergasted!" was the vocal reaction of Claire Windsor, beautiful stage and screen star, to the news that a $100,000 suit had been filed against her in Oakland, Cal., by Mrs. Marion Y. Read, who charges the beauty with alienating the affections of her husband, Alfred C. Read, broker. Miss Windsor not only denies the charge, but contemplates a damage suit against her accuser for the same amount.

Student Tells Botany Club of Hydnaceae

Characteristics, habitat, and economic importance of hydnaceae were described by Lee Wallace Miller, G. of Wellman, in a talk, "The hydnaceae of Iowa" before the Botany club yesterday afternoon.

"Hydnaceae are fungi with spiny fruiting bodies," Mr. Miller explained. "They are commonly found in forests on living trees and prostrate logs. The hydnaceae are a very active wood-rotting fungi. As a parasitism growth, they often indirectly cause the fall of live trees or make them worthless by rotting away the trunks."

Grain Prices Show Strong Up Tendency

CHICAGO, April 6 (AP)—Except for a final quick dip on Kansas reports of showers, grain markets showed a decided tendency to go up most of the time today.

The general upward trend of wheat was largely a result of bullish advices in regard to cumulative effects of the March zero wave and of ensuing drought, together with two weeks of dust storms over big sections of domestic winter crop territory.

Wheat closed nervous, the same as yesterday's finish to 1-4 cent up, corn 1/2 to 1-4 of a shade advance, oats 1/2 to 1 cent down, and provisions varying from 17 cents set-back to a rise of 5 cents.

Belief was expressed in some quarters that the United States government April crop report Friday would show winter wheat plant condition at a low figure.

Some of the foremost Chicago operators were aggressively bullish, contending that a big share of the winter crop had been irreparably damaged.

Corn and oats imitated wheat. Shipping demand for corn was somewhat improved.

Provisions were irregular, lard advancing with hog values but meats showing declines.

Closing indifferents: wheat—May 54 1/2-1 1/2, 56 7/8 to 57; July 57 to 57 1/2, 59 1/2-1 1/2, 61 7/8. Corn—May 34 1/2, 35 1/2; July 38 1/4, 39 1/2. Soybeans—April 40 1/4, 40 7/8 to 41.

Research Project to Show Alumni Opinion of Athletics

How a selected group of 1,200 University of Iowa alumni evaluates intercollegiate athletics and the other college activities and how these influence later success in life will be shown by a survey now under way.

M. N. Thisted, G. of Iowa City, is undertaking the research project under the guidance of Prof. Charles H. McCloy of the physical education staff and Frank B. Knight and Elmer T. Peterson, professors in the college of education.

From the answers set down on the questionnaires, Mr. Thisted expects to discover reasons for participation in intercollegiate athletics, effect upon efforts to make the most of college education, and how procedures of hygiene and keeping fit carry over into periods of from five to 25 years after graduation.

The survey also will record the factors which influenced the securing of the first position and subsequent business progress, and the extent to which physical activities were continued after graduation.

Alumni will express frankly their opinions upon athletics as the developer of team play, real friendships, loyalty to others, calmness under trying conditions, confidence and courage, initiative, leadership, physical vigor, and as subduer of undesirable habits.
