Gold Repeal Gets Senate O.K.

Republicans Raise Shout of Bad Faith

Act Permits Payment of All Debts in Legal Tender Money

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP)—Amid cries of "bad faith" and "repudiation," the senate today gave final congressional approval to the administration's resolution permitting payment of all contracts in legal tender money.

An overwhelming coalition of Democrats and western Republicans drove through by a vote of 48 to 20 the measure requested by the administration, eliminating the gold payment requirement from all contracts, public and private, either present or future.

Legal Tender

This means that war debts, mortgages and Liberty bonds, as well as all other governmental and private obligations, may be settled in legal tender money, obviating the requirement that gold shall be used.

The resolution had already passed the house and needs only the signatures of Vice President Garner and Speaker Rainey before going to the White House.

Two attempts to modify the measure by eliminating its retroactive features and to exclude governmental obligations were rejected 48 to 21 and 38 to 26, respectively.

To protests that the resolution would call for repudiation of government obligations, defenders replied that the government had the right to abrogate contracts in carrying out its constitutional function of regulating money.

"Dishonest-Dishonorable"

"For generations American will grow red around the ears when they think of the dishonest and dishonorable thing this congress did," Reed (R. Pa.), told his colleagues.

In reply, Senator Borah (R. Ida.), said "We must cease to pay tribute to the gold standard at the expense of the American people."

of the American people.

"It has been said that this resolution is repudiation," Borah added. "I'm not prepared to controvert that fact. But while the bondholder has the technical right to demand payment in gold he must take his position with the rest of the American people in the sacrifice they have been making in the last year and a half."

Party lines were split as the senate argued over the honor and constitutionality of the proposal.

"If the government agreed to pay

Seven Face Death Under Kidnap Law

Grand Jury Indictments Follow Confession by McGee

KANSAS CITY, June 3 (AP)—Facing possible death on the gallows under the Missouri law, Walter McGee, 28, former Oregon convict, confessed the kidnaping of Mary McElroy today, police said, as a federal grand jury indicted him and seven others in the plot.

The abduction of the 25 year old daughter of City Manager H. F. McElroy, her safe release on $30,000 ransom, the arrest of eight suspects, the return of five from Amarillo, Tex., and the indictments and confession were the events of a single week to the hour.

"Tell Everything"

As Chief of Detectives Higgins started to question McGee upon his return from Amarillo today, the former convict replied "I want to tell everything and get it over with."

Admitting he and Clarence Stevens boldly entered the city manager's home a week ago and forced Miss McElroy to accompany them, McGee said "we did not intend to harm the young woman.

"We didn't even give the consequences a thought. We just wanted an easy payoff. We thought McElroy would be an easy payoff, too."

In his rambling confession, McGee said he and Stevens first intended to kidnap Henry F. McElroy, Jr., the city manager's son.

Return Indictments

As the story of the kidnap plot was being related, the federal grand jury returned indictments against McGee; Clarence Click, held at police headquarters; Clarence Stevens and George McGee, fugitives; Windell Johnson, Hazel Johnson, L. R. Gilbert and Lenora Gilbert, who were arrested yesterday with McgGee, at Amarillo.

The indictments charged interstate transportation of Miss McElroy, punishable by life imprisonment, and the sending of extortion letters, which Miss McElroy was forced to write, through the mail.

Assistant District Attorney Larson said the indictments would be held in abeyance pending the outcome of charges which T. A. J. Mastin, county prosecutor, had prepared to file under the state statute providing death as the maximum penalty.

Court to Determine Danville Permit Tilt

BURLINGTON, June 3 (AP)—The suit of T. O. Milligan of Danville to determine whether the Danville town council has the right to refuse issuance of a beer permit will come up for hearing June 8, Judge Oscar Hale ruled today.

The plaintiff's petition states he filed application for a class B permit April 28 and that the application was refused by the council May 29 in spite of the fact that he had met all the qualifications of the Iowa beer law.

Milligan also asked the court for a writ of certiorari commanding the Danville mayor and councilmen to produce a transcript of the meeting at which his application was denied.

Alumni Renew Friendships, Recall Old Memories as 700 Gather for Day's Activities

Luncheon at Iowa Union, Meetings Headline Program

Half a century of University of Iowa products passed in review yesterday at noon, as alumni of classes from 1878 to 1928 gathered at Iowa Union for luncheon and a meeting of the Alumni association.

The luncheon was a respite in the day's activities of the more than 700 graduates who gathered here for the events of the seventy-third Commencement. Golf, visits to various university departments, and renewal of old friendships occupied the attention of visiting alumni through the morning.

Nearly 500 of these graduates gathered for the luncheon. Several alumni, representing various classes, addressed the gathering. President Walter A. Jessup spoke briefly on the growth of education in Iowa through the medium of a state university.

Reap Dividends

"We are reaping dividends from the fact that Iowa men, from the beginning, believed in education," President Jessup said. "They established schools and courts of justice, and trained their professional men."

The University of Iowa and Iowa's entire educational system are the culmination of the idealism of generations of early pioneers, he declared.

"If I were asked to name the pride of Iowa," the president said, "I would say that the pride of Iowa is the fact that there is a spirit of willingness to make sacrifices in order to train succeeding generations of youth."

Presented

President emeritus Thomas H. Macbride was presented to the assembled alumni. Professor Macbride, who joined the University of Iowa faculty 55 years ago, will deliver the charge to the graduates at Commencement ceremonies tomorrow morning.

Robert J. Bannister of Des Moines, retiring president of the Alumni association, presided at the luncheon. Prof. Forest C. Ensign of the college of education, incoming president, was presented to the gathering.

Alumni speakers were: William Osmond of Great Bend, Kan., liberal arts '73; Rush C. Butler of Chicago, liberal arts '93; O. H. L. Mason of Long Beach, Cal., liberal arts '93; Philip Macbride of Seattle, Wash., liberal arts '09; Virgil Hancher of Chicago, liberal arts '18; L. M. B. Morrissey of Davenport, law '08; Clifford Powell of Red Oak, law '13; and Guy E. Mack of Storm Lake, law '03.

Wins Cup

The Alumni association cup, awarded each year to the class with the largest percentage of its members present at reunion, was won by the medical class of 1893, with 8 out of 21 living members present. The winning class was organized by Dr. F. E. Boyd of Colfax.

The medical class of 1888, organized by Dr. E. M. Brown of Marengo, won second honors, and the medical class of 1903, organized by Dr. E. C. McClure of Bussey, was awarded third place.

World Flyer Seeks Paris Field Today

Mattern Scheduled to Reach France by Six-Thirty

NEW YORK, June 3 (AP)—Bound around the world alone Jimmie Mattern soared over Newfoundland and headed out to open sea today seven hours after he lifted his monoplane Century of Progress, from Floyd Bennett field in Brooklyn at 3:30 a.m. (CST.).

With the wind behind him and fair weather all about, the 28 year old Texas aviator was sighted at 11:30 a.m. (CST), over Lewisporte, some 1,200 miles to the north of New York.

Gains Time

By not landing at Harbor Grace—the customary stopping point for flyers before they attempt the Atlantic—Mattern gained almost four hours advantage on the round the world record of 8 days, 15 hours and 51 minutes set by Willey Post and Harold Gatty in 1921.

Following the Lindbergh route, Mattern's first scheduled stop is Paris, which he expects to reach within 27 hours. Then, after six hours sleep, straight to Moscow, dipping over the Tempelhof airdrome in Berlin, en route.

But first, there was fog and rain along the Irish ceast to battle.

The bullet-shaped plane, resembling a mighty eagle with its wings dappled in red, white and blue, carries no radio and further word of Mattern's progress east from Newfoundland must come from ships at sea until he noses over Ireland.

Bad Visibility

Only at Clare, regarded as a likely spot for Mattern to strike the coast, were weather conditions fair for flying along the east Atlantic coastline. Elsewhere, there was rain and bad visibility.

Irish officials ordered civic guards along the seaboard to maintain a close watch.

"I'll be back in a week," the San Angelo trap-drummer-turned-aviator cried out to a small crowd of well-wishers as he climbed into his plane at Floyd Bennett field and inaugurated the 1933 transoceanic flying season.

The ship carried 700 gallons of gasoline—sufficient to remain aloft for 28 hours. Its cruising speed is 150 miles an hour, pushed up to around 170 with fair winds.

Morgan Deals Might Lead to New Statutes

Committeemen Ponder Regulation of Few Hand Control

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP)—Legislation to prevent the concentration into a few hands of control of industry and finance is being seriously studied by members of the senate banking committee as a result of the disclosures in the investigation of J. P. Morgan and company.

While the committee itself has taken no formal action in this direction, individual members said today it would be considered and that, meanwhile, they were giving thought to ways of setting up limitations.

Wise?

Although most senators on the committee agreed the inquiry has disclosed no violations of law, several of them said it had raised the question in their minds of how far it was wise to permit one institution to go in extending its control over industry through financial means.

No specific legislative proposal was advanced and the committee men said they were not yet ready to discuss it publicly.

Will Submit Report

Ferdinand Pecora, the committee counsel, plans to submit a comprehensive report to the committee at the conclusion of the inquiry which probably will contain recommendations for legislation.

New evidence bearing on the extent of Morgan power was presented today in a table placed in the record by Pecora showing the four big utility companies in which the firm is interested receive 16.5 per cent of the total annual gross earnings of all power and gas companies in the nation.

Previous testimony has shown that the utility group formed by Morgan in its holding company, the United corporation, is the biggest in the country and serves an area with a population of more than 50,000,000 people.

Johnson County Gets Additional $1,950 of Reconstruction Funds

Although recently announced that Reconstruction Finance corporation funds for unemployment relief were exhausted, Dr. W. L. Bywater, chairman of the Johnson county relief committee, yesterday received a telegram from Ralph E. Kittenger, state chairman, saying that Johnson county would be allowed $1,950 for June.

Dr. Bywater said that the amount would be enough to finance the relief work through June as the 59 reforestation workers were sending $25 per month to their families here and the gardens were beginning to supply much of the foodstuffs.

Baccalaureate This Evening, Commencement Tomorrow to Mark Final Steps in Awards

Seen From Old Capitol

By Tom Yoseloff

There could be no doubt that the alumni had taken the town yesterday! They filled Old Capitol to overflowing—Iowa Union brimmed with them. Some sort of a record must have been set in hand-shaking or back-clapping, as old friends met after a separation of many years, as alumni of half a century ago renewed acquaintance with the Iowa campus, full of many changes, as old grads greeted their instructors once again.

Though no statistics were available last night, it is probable that this gathering set a record in numbers as well. The registration cards at the alumni office showed that nearly 1,000 members of former classes had returned to the campus yesterday. The large attendance was clearly evident in the reunion of alumnae nurses, at which nearly 100 were present.

This will be a reunion not quickly forgotten. There will be memories to paste in albums and memories to flash on the screen, if the numbers of cameras and moving-picture cameras were any indication.

Seen and heard at the alumni luncheon yesterday: A group of '83 men and women sitting at a table bearing a sign with the figures "1918," after their own table had been filled . . . One of them, more conscientious—or more proud—than the rest, took a sheet of paper and a pencil out of his pocket, and improvised a substitute sign "1883" . . . One '18 grad to another: "I've got to get out my Hawkeye when I get home and look through it, to make the names and faces fit." . . . And it must have been embarrassing to meet a familiar face and find that the name wouldn't come . . . Especially in the case of meeting

Bank Receives New Charter

First Capital State Takes National Bank Affiliation

The First Capital State bank is now the First Capital National bank.

The change was authorized in a telegram received yesterday from J. F. T. O'Connor, comptroller of currency at Washington, D. C. Stockholders of the bank approved of the change from a state to a national bank in a meeting May 22, at the American Legion Community building.

Officers of the First Capital National bank said that customers would continue to use the checks bearing the old name, First Capital State bank, for the time being. Checks bearing the new name will be printed as soon as possible.

The First Capital National bank has been a member of the Federal Reserve system since shortly after its organization in 1932. In making the change from a state to a national charter the bank officers pointed out that it was in line with President Roosevelt's national banking policy, making for integration and centralization.

Directors and officers remain unchanged: Lee Nagle, president; Frank D. Williams, cashier; and Arthur J. Cox, Willis W. Mercer, George Nagle, Lee Nagle, Dean Chester A. Phillips, Prof. Henry Rietz, Albert B. Sidwell, Merritt C. Speidel, Dr. Roscoe H. Volland, Frank D. Williams, and Dr. Andrew H. Woods, directors.

Repeat Performance of "Hay Fever" Ends Day of Fast Action

Before an audience which almost filled natural science auditorium—and filled it to overflowing with laughter and applause—a University theater cast presented Noel Coward's mad farce, "Hay Fever" last night.

Alumni, seniors, seekers of advanced degrees, and their friends topped off with the Commencement play a day filled to the brim with activities.

The same note of fast, sure fire acting, the same note of sophisticated hilarity which made the presentation of the comedy in April a brilliant success characterized the repeat performance last evening.

Ethel Hanley as Judith Bliss emoted quite as well—and with as little apparent meaning. John Price Hughes as David Bliss was still cynical, understanding, and furiously angry. Casper Garrigues still jumped upon furniture and grabbed various hands, and Beulah Sanders as Sorel Bliss still wanted to be conventional.

Gabrielle Royal deserves an orchid for her especially fine bit of work as a flapper; Bertha Heetland was a properly expressionless and unmoved maid.

The direction by Prof. Vance M. Morton was careful, and settings, costumes, and lights were well planned and executed.

All in all a hilariously happy close for a full day!

Arrange Return

DES MOINES (AP)—Arrangements for the return this month of Orval Chenoweth, a member of the French Foreign Legion in Algeria, have been completed.

Jail Breakers Still Sought

Search Centers Near Central Oklahoma; One More Taken

BARTLESVILLE, Okla., June 3 (AP)—A serpentine trail of crime, twisting crazily across five states, was followed relentlessly tonight by officers seeking 10 dangerous convicts who escaped from the Kansas penitentiary Memorial day.

The search centered in Oklahoma, where an eleventh convict was arrested yesterday. Widely scattered reports indicated the fugitives had split into small groups, fleeing in many directions.

Posses sought three overalled men who stopped at a hardware store in Pawhuska, Okla., late today, asking for ammunition and departed before the clerk could find cartridges of the caliber desired.

The clerk expressed the opinion one of the men was Milbur Underhill, notorious killer and leader of the fugitives.

Sheriff Conner of Pawhuska said he had received a telegram from the Iowa bureau of criminal identification saying that three men who drove a new sedan similar to that of the Pawhuhka shoppers and bearing the same Kansas license number were wanted for bank robbery.

Sheriff Conner expressed the belief the men, also suspected of the theft of 11 rifles from the ranch home of Jke Myers yesterday, were not the convicts.

Their motor car bore the same license number reported seen early yesterday morning on a car at Magnolia, Ia., where the occupants filled a drum with gasoline and sped away when the garage proprietor approached.

Mrs. Arthur J. Cox entertained 12 guests at dinner Thursday evening, honoring Mrs. Elmer Fisher and her daughters, Elizabeth and Suzanne of Yankton, S. Dak., who are her house guests. Churches to Hold School This Summer

Plan to Give Courses in Four Graded Departments

The Protestant churches of Iowa City are planning a daily vacation church school from June 19 to 30 for school children, including preschools and high school, Mrs. C. J. Lapp, secretary of the Iowa City Council of Religious Education announced yesterday.

A curriculum is being offered in four different departments: beginners', primary, juniors, and the "teen" age. The beginners' department will be directed by Julia Parker, who has an M.A. degree from Chicago university in religious education.

It is aimed at leading the children into adventures of neighborliness by using everyday experience in life as teaching opportunities for the development of Christian social attitudes.

Directs Primary Department

The primary department will be directed by Evelyn Quandahl, high ranking student in the senior liberal arts class and former teacher in the church school. Its aim is to lead the children through a course of nature study into an appreciation of nature.

The junior department will be under the direction of Julia Barber. Its aim is to lead the boys and girls into an appreciation of control, through the use of demonstrations, worship, experimentation and recreation.

Offers Course

Mrs. Walter Hutton of Des Moines will offer one course from June 26 to 30 to the "teen" age group. Mrs. Hutton is the wife of the state secretary of the International Council of Religious Education. She has presented courses in many places throughout the state. Kathryn Letts of Iowa City will follow Mrs. Hutton with a course on the use of dramatics within the church.

Methods of worship through various forms of art and dramatics will be taught to the "teen" age group. Credit in the International Council of Religious Education is given for the course.

Various Churches

The departments of the school will be held in various churches: the beginners at the Methodist church, the primary at the Methodist church, the junior at the Christian church, the "teen" age at the Presbyterian church.

There will be no tuition for admission and the only collection will be taken at a program to be given the last week of the term.

former women of the class who had since been married.

The record for the oldest alumnus goes to William Osmond of Great Neck, Kan. Mr. Osmond was a member of the liberal arts class of '73, and of the law class of '89. He had the distinction of being the only member to attend the Commencement on the sixtieth anniversary of his own graduation.

A close second, however, was J. J. McConnell of Ainsworth, a member of the liberal arts class of '76, who returned to his campus yesterday, 57 years after his graduation.

The ends of the continent were united also, in the persons of A. E. Fitch, law '83, of Palmer, Mass., and O. H. L. Mason, liberal arts '93, from Long Beach, Cal. Mr. Fitch, who is known as "Captain" to his friends in the east, arrived in Iowa City Tuesday, wearing a gold beret, and with two large banners on his car announcing his alma mater and his class.

Among the other alumni was Philip Macbride of Seattle, Wash., liberal arts '09, son of President Emeritus Thomas H. Macbride. He is now an attorney in Seattle, and was recently made made regent of Washington university.

Graduating seniors should find much of interest in the baccalaureate address of the Rev. Mr. Brown tonight. For he represents the point of view of the older generation, a faith in religion and a faith in the triumph of right. In his latest book he set forth the "Gospel of Main Street," a gospel which is a high quality sample of that of church-going members of the older generation, which all-knowing seniors sometimes regard too lightly. At all events, they may see a new point of view . . .

'What Shall I Wear?' It's a Question Old as the Ages

By JANE COOLEY
Society Editor, The Daily Iowan

Since woman first wore nothing but tiger skins no portion of the female population ever gossiped over afternoon tea, or even over the back fence without eventually discussing the problem of "what shall I wear?"—a question old as the ages, but ever new and interesting.

Today's fashions, fashions for a modern world of simplicity and sophistication, are utterly fetching. Strong-minded indeed, is the girl who can resist more than merely window-shopping for the scores of new creations, their rampant color and swagger nonchalance striking the keynote scheme of the season's frocks and gowns—a scheme so adaptable to going places and doing things.

The parade of chic, cool costumes includes a wide range of materials and color, fabrics and weaves of much individuality. White is the color for all occasions, but it shares favor with checks, plaids, fascinating prints and embroidery, and the darkest of blues, browns and grays. Your wardrobe is sadly lacking if it does not have a summer black or beet-root red—preferably linen—as particular favorites.

Cottons carry the honors of the season. Chambray, percale, dimity, batiste, Swiss, duck, organdie, calico, muslin, voiles and lawn equal pique, matelasse and seersucker, pickwale, ginghams and linens—best of all—in their practical sensibility.

Quite the swankest things seen for years in the sports list are the new twine lace knits and sheer wool spectator sports dresses.

Necklines are either very high or very low—fashion dictates no happy medium in this respect—and the shouder compliment, though still broad—is a still more flattering drop square line.

Fuller sleeves than ever perfect the straight silhouette. Throw away your organdie and mousseline de soie decorations, which, though quite coy, are much too bothersome to be smart, and sew on buttons, chalk white buttons—can you imagine anything lovelier than a black linen, strewn with these from neckline to hem—, glass buttons, self-color buttons; little buttons and big, round, square and cubic. Cotton lovers must of necessity develop a mania for originality in contrast—so do buy buttons for something.

The girl of early morning tennis and late afternoon golf feels every inch at home in this season's dinner and evening formal gowns. There seems to be a monopoly on materials, for gingham, pique and linen frocks for evening are even more sophisticated than the newest sheer, floating chiffons in murky prints and black. Simplicity of silhouette and tailored frankness are the rule even in a starlit roof-garden.

Every dress must have its coat, and every coat its dress, both dark and light, wool and cotton alike. One of the smartest ensembles seen recently is a lacquered hammered chiffon wrap in black, matching a very demure formal gown in plain black chiffon. If you buy a dress, demand a coat, too, or go searching for one.

If there are those of you who sigh mournfully over the exquisite imports from Mainbocher and Lanvin—enjoy their pictured loveliness, but remember the rightness and complete chic of the modifications of American sensibility and simplicity.

Senate Vetoes Tax Methods

Seek Way to Finance Huge Public Works Program

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP)—The senate finance committee today rejected the sales tax and treasury note issue methods of financing the $3,300,000,000 public works program in the administration's industrial recovery bill.

It then deferred until Monday a final decision on the remainder of the measure, including Chairman Harrison's substitute for the house increases in normal tax levies.

Democratic leaders, meanwhile, began marshalling all available strength to put back in the measure the provision authorizing the president to license industries to enforce codes of fair competition, including wages, hours of labor and production. This was stricken out by the committee last night.

Senator Reed (R. Pa.), proposed a general manufacturers sales tax of 1 3-4 per cent in the committee late today with exemptions for food, clothing and medicine. It was defeated 10 to 8.

Senator McAdoo (D. Cal.), offered the treasury note issue proposition with certain limitations to guard against undue inflation. This was rejected, 12 to 5.

Gift of Rice to South Carolina

South Carolina progressed little up to 1693. About that time, a sea captain from the Far East presented the governor of the colony with a bag of rice. The rice was raised as an experiment, and in time, the state became the largest rice-producing and rice-exporting state in the Union.

BOOK REVIEWS

Fourth Norseman

The Boat of Longing, by O. E. Rolvaag; Harper, $2.50. Reviewed by ROLAND A. WHITE.

Once the author, now deceased, was a fisher lad from Norway, knowing no English but possessing inside a gift of expression with which he was to contribute to the literature of an English speaking people. Nils, too, is a Norwegian fisher youth who could not speak English, whose artistic gift expresses itself in music on the violin. This is the story of Nils and of his loneliness in a land where his talents are alien and unencouraged.

Through what happens to Nils, Rolvaag illustrates the high hopes and the lower realities of immigrants. As usual, there is chatty dialog, even in the author's own exposition. There is simplicity and feeling, though the style seems hurt by translation from the Norwegian in which it was written 12 years ago.

Nils is no Hansa, like characters in Giants in the Earth, Peder Victorious, and Their Father's God. He is, however, a member of that even larger family of Norse immigrants about whom Rolvaag has written so understandingly. Of a newer generation of pioneers, introduced to the city of Minneapolis and to lumber camp work, Nils adds to the general portrait gallery of Norse Americans.

This is no book for anyone who did not like Rolvaag's better work in the Hansa trilogy. It is written too much with the mind, too little with the eyes. It lacks vivid background—although this may be an aid to the effect of isolation intended by Rolvaag. Some portions laid in Norway mean less to Americans than to the Norwegians for whom the book was written. But Rolvaag readers will welcome publication of this book they have missed, and those interested in the genuine addition to that scantily developed field of U. S. literature.

Marxian Interpreter

In Place of Profit, by Harry F. Ward. New York, Scribners, 1933, $2.50. Reviewed by TOM YOSELOFF.

What would life be like in a state in which men do not work for the hope of profit—where some other motive or motives have taken hold upon the population? In a state in which men are socialized, in which they work for the common good? What is life lige in such a state—in the only state in which the profit motive in economics has been discarded, and a new one substituted—in the Union of Socialistic Soviet Republics?

Harry Ward, in his new book, "In Place of Profit," asks these questions and attempts to find the answer. Ward's interest in the Russias goes back to Soviet beginnings. This, his latest venture, is the result of a year spent in Russia during 1931 and 1932, when the first five-year plan was drawing to a close, and many of the objectives of the communist state were being realized.

Ward did not travel with tourist groups—no conducted tours of tractor factories, airplane works, libraries, and other outward signs of a new culture. He and his wife traveled alone. They lived with the workers as much as it was possible for Americans to do so, and obtained their honest reactions to the work of the government.

His book is therefore a mixture of the philosophy of these workers and of the economics of communism, as distinguished from capitalism. He has reinterpreted the ideals of Marx and the subsequent interpretations of Lenin, the bases of the new system in Russia.

To these theoretical foundations he has added a study of the actual workings of social motives in industry—the "shock" brigades, and the socialist "competition" pacts—and he has emerged with a reiteration of his faith that the Russian ideal of a state of socialized men can be realized. Not in a year, perhaps, Not in 10 years, or 100. But eventually.

Russia, Ward believes—and presents proof to substantiate his claim—has found the answer, the key to unlock a door of humanity closed in capitalistic states. Russia has found the answer in re-education of the masses—in the socialization of infants in cradles, of workers in factories, of gray-headed peasants in the fields, of doctors, of lawyers, of technicians. It has found the answer in instilling in them a social feeling, a pride, which will encompass their fellow men and their state, of which they are a part.

All in all, concludes Ward, life in the Union of Socialistic Soviet Republics is pleasant. Fraught with hard work, to be sure, and plain living, but with a goal in view which makes all men brethern. He speaks at great length of the new motives which have come in to make men strive—motives which take the place of profit.

He has seen the broad aims of communism, he has seen its attempts to make the lives of all men better, devoted to a common purpose. He has seen the pride of the workers in their achievements, he has seen teachers imbued with the knowledge that they are helping a great cause, teaching the alphabet to gray bearded peasants in the fields.

He has seen more than this. He has seen individuals lost in this social striving. He has seen families living in unsanitary crowded quarters in great cities, he has seen food rationed out as in wartime, often insufficient to keep individuals in comfort. But this he has minimized. The lack of consumption goods he has made a minor factor. In other words, the same criticism might be leveled at Ward's book as at most other books on Russia.

Ward, like many other writers, went to Russia to find something, and he knew before he went just what he wanted to find. Thus his book is a fine presentation of one side of the Russian problem—the positive side. It is not, however, the book that many students have been hoping for—a clear, unbiased presentation of a rounded picture of Russia in all its aspects.

Morgenthau to Make Own Investigation of Grain Corporations

WASHINGTON, June 3 (AP) — Gov. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., of the farm credit administration will make his own intensive investigation of the inter-relations of the grain stabilization corporation and the farmers national grain corporation of Chicago.

As the first step, he has made arrangements for moving all the voluminous records of the stabilization corporation from Chicago as soon as its affairs are closed in the near future.

A special examination of these will be made here by investigators under Morgenthau's direction. The study will include records of the extensive grain sales operations carried on for three years.

Their differences of opinion as to the modus operandi of conducting the probe all smoothed out, Senator Carter Glass of Virginia (left) and Ferdinand Pecora, counsel for the senate committee, are pictured as the Morgan hearing was resumed in the capital. Keep Going TOMORROW morning 917 young men and women will receive diplomas—their passports from the world of the university to the world at large. Of this number, nearly 800 will be receiving their bachelor's degrees.

Their university days will be officially at an end for most of them—days in which they were training themselves to live, not only to earn a livelihood during future working hours, but also to obtain the culture that will enable them to use profitably their hours of leisure.

For most of them the way will be rough. They will find their chosen professions hopelessly oversupplied with ambitious men and women at the present time. In some cases this will mean a long wait before an opening is made for them in their own lines of work.

How they will spend this time of inactivity will serve to determine to a large extent their future usefulness. The time will come eventually when men and women with training in particular fields will again be in great demand.

The question then will be, has the applicant maintained his interest in the vocation for which he was trained—has he followed the latest developments—has he applied his past training to changes and to new demands.

Without doubt the best way to maintain an interest and a broad point of view is to take further training in the university to be prepared for the opening when it does come. The fact that 134 of the degrees awarded tomorrow will be advanced degrees is proof that many graduates are taking advantage of the time to prepare themselves better for their work.

But whatever course the graduate who leaves the university tomorrow may decide upon, one thing he should do—keep his university point of view. He should keep an open mind and active interest in the changes going on in the world about him. He should keep his interest in things cultural. Only then will he be ready when his opportunity arrives.

Revolt in Congress

DISSATISFACTION with the program for economies in veterans' pensions flamed into open revolt in congress Friday and the administration lost its first battle of the session. Flaming since the passage of the half-billion dollar economy act early in the year, protests against the president's high-handedness resulted in a compromise limiting his heretofore limitless authority to 25 per cent cuts in service-connected disability allowances. And what was hailed as the American Legion lobby's first defeat in all the years of its existence becomes more or less a victory.

At the same time, visions of saving a billion dollars a year in governmental expenditures lose their brightness by approximately $250,000,000.

Sponsored by a non-administration Democrat, the amendment to the independent offices appropriations bill—cleanup measure for all previous legislation—was passed only by the timely vote of Vice President Garner, who exercised his constitutional prerogative for the first time. It is significant because it marks the first sign of administrative decadence, unless the recent inflation measure may be called a direct defeat for the chief executive.

It is significant, too, in that the vote showed the strength of the dissatisfaction and the readiness of senate Democrats to forsake their leader for the home folks. Thousands of telegrams and letters to congressmen have had their effect. Perhaps it shows, also, that confidence in President Roosevelt's program—heartily expressed in congress by those same Democrats who insisted that the president knew what he was doing—is waning. At least, the administration managed to effect a compromise, which is something.

Impartial Mr. Morgan

NAIVE headline writers a week ago were quick to point out how "non-partisan" J. Pierpont Morgan II was in permitting political leaders to get in on the ground floor of new stock issues at below-market prices. Had he favored only Republicans, it would have looked bad—especially to Democratic investigators. Had he favored only Democrats, it would have looked almost as bad. But to bestow his kindness both ways made him impartial.

The point is, of course, that Morgan & Co. had no desire to be partial to any political party. Its concern was to be partial to Morgan & Co. If betting on both horses insured not losing on the political race, shrewd Wall Street veterans would play to win no matter what the outcome.

Put it wasn't bribery or anything illegal, was it? Perhaps not. Mr. Morgan should not find it necessary to break any of the laws begun by men of his way of thought with the constitution of 1787 and continued by them right down through John Marshall, Daniel Webster, and Henry Clay to Charles Evans Hughes. The presidential strain apparently was interrupted March 4, 1933—but the supreme court and all the rest persist.

Nor was it necessary to bribe such men as Calvin Coolidge or John J. Raskob. They, too, were in the favored circle. What they may have done or been willing to do was for the interests of a group in which they were members.

Possibly the best characterization of this situation was made by Herbert Hoover while still a great engineer. In a magazine article regarding investments, he spoke of two classes of investors. Those on the inside, with brains and ability, would acquire more stock, ultimately most of that possessed to begin with by outsiders. Why not? Did they not represent the only persons capable of looking after it? The others were only suckers, too dumb to hold stock.

Insiders have always been represented in United States politics. Outsiders usually have not. In 1928, for instance, the two major political parties were as near alike on fundamental economic questions as it was possible for them to be. Only prohibition and a shading on tariff separated them.

But 1928 was a prosperity year, and in 1932 outsiders were represented in the Democratic party. One Franklin D. Roosevelt had the nerve (Al Smith told him so) to speak of a forlorn individual forgotten in the economic policies of his government—the "forgotten man" at the base of the economic pyramid.

At Chicago the Smith-Raskob faction, corresponding to the Hoover-Mellon G. O. P. wing, was ousted by the "progressive" forces of Governor Roosevelt, who promised a new deal. To date the new deal has shaped up convincingly. Millions of voters who felt definitely November last that they were outsiders to those who ran their government have a new confidence. For that confidence to continue long there must also continue policies resting on the broader basis promised by "F. D."

Insiders can fool some outsiders all of the time, and all outsiders some of the time—but they can't fool all the outsiders all of the time. Now, some of the more keen outsiders are asking what the administration will do about lowering tariffs, raising income taxes, and putting a check to the rise of financial dictators like J. P. Morgan II.

GOOD MORNING

Green and tender, millions of blades of corn are reaching up through the black earth this morning. Nurtured by a bountiful soil, they will grow inch by inch in the warm summer and stand in the waving fields as a composite symbol of wealth and plenty.

Meanwhile farmers and merchants and government officials and traders in grain are hoping fervently that a drought might come and wither the green blades or a providential scythe level every third row to the ground.

In Washington this morning Secretary of Agriculture Wallace will interview representatives of the meat packing industry concerning various schemes designed to cut down the supply of hogs and cattle in order that the price of meat might be raised.

This morning, also, many millions of men and women are wondering just how much longer they are going to be able to eat. To many of them it will matter little whether prices go up or down; they have no money with which to buy at any price.

It must be an amusing thing to these men and women to read in the newspapers that the great problem of the times is to devise means of reducing the supply of goods in order that the price might be raised. It must bring them a cheery feeling to know that the markets of the world are glutted with food while they are hungry.

Such is the strange world into which the blades of corn are growing this morning with so much confidence. Is it too much to hope that by next winter it will be possible to find a use for each ear that comes from the blades?

Kaiser Wilhelm Hohenzollern II, Emperor et Rex, rose up in wrath the other day at his exile castle in Doorn. The subject of his royal displeasure was Prince Wilhelm, eldest son of the former crown prince and heir presumptive to the faded throne.

Prince Wilhelm had fallen in love with a commoner. That much was all right, because even heir presumptives are allowed to fall in love. But Wilhelm meant to marry the girl, who happens to be a certain Dorothea von Salviati of Bonn. He proposed to marry her with full knowledge that his rights to the throne would automatically be canceled; he didn't expect it to hurt the emperor's feelings.

But it did. Indignant, the Kaiser dispatched a telegram to Prince Hubert, second brother of Prince Wilhelm, ordering him to stay away from the wedding. Hubert was to have represented the royal family. Dorothea took the rebuke calmly, Wilhelm sorrowfully.

The significant part of the story lies in the attitude Hitler would take toward the squabble. To attend the wedding would be to snub the Kaiser, for whom it is known he has a strong leaning. To openly support the Kaiser would mean approval of a type of medievalism that is dying an appropriate death. Hitler was expected to do nothing, wisely.

If yesterday's plans are completed, Miss Salviati will probably be Mrs. Wilhelm Hohenzollern today.

BEHIND THE SCENES — IN HOLLYWOOD —

By HARRISON CARROLL

STUDIO GOSSIP | FILM SCANDAL | SCREEN COMMENT

HOLLYWOOD—Here's news that ought to make Ramon Novarro sit up and take notice. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is planning to put Lupe Velez opposite him in "Laughing Boy."

The possibilities of the combination are self-evident. Both these players come from Mexico, but it is practically their one similarity. Where Lupe is vociferous and bold, Ramon is soft-spoken and poetic.

Team them in a love story and—well, it ought not to be dull.

In picture-making, of course, there's always the chance of a slip-up. Director W. S. Van Dyke wants Lupe in the role and she will be back here in time for the film. It only remains to keep other directors from putting on a louder bid.

Very funny, the story they tell of Zeppo Marx' chauffeur.

The other day, when Groucho and Zeppo were arriving, Paramount sent two studio limousines over to meet the train in Pasadena. While waiting for it, one of the publicity boys saw a colored chauffeur polishing away at a long and expensive motor.

He inquired and found that it was Zeppo's car.

"Too bad," he said, "we could have left one of these machines at the studio."

The colored boy squinted at the sturdy limousine and then resumed his polishing.

"Well," he said, "maybe you can carry Mr. Marx' suitcase in that."

HOLLYWOOD PARADE

Withe every studio calling for him, Leslie Howard was able to drive a shrewd bargain with Warners. Report says he gets $50,000 for the first picture, with $15,000 tacked on for each succeeding role. The English actor is becoming one of Hollywood's prime polo enthusiasts. Last Sunday, playing number 1 man on the "Hollywood Cats," he scored three goals and was an important factor in the defeat of Walt Disney's four. Charles Farrell also made a goal. These Sunday maches always draw a film crowd.

Unless her doctor changes his mind, Jobyna Ralston goes home today, carrying her young son for a first glimpse at his future home. Next month, Dixie Lee has a reservation on the same hospital room. And before Jobyna, Sue Carol had the room when her baby was born.

The Fox lot is crowded with new drivers. Miriam Jordan is waiting to get her car out of the repair shop to continue her training, and now Janet Gaynor has decided to learn . . . Helen Twelvetrees and Frank Woody had so much fun on their honeymoon camping trip that they'll take another vacation in the high Sierras. They carry a cabin-trailer on their car. This summer, they'll be gone a month.

Tom Geraghty wires that he and Douglas Fairbanks are bound for a month in Spain, Italy and northern Africa. That means they'll join young Doug . . . And here's a tip. See Clarence Brown's "Night Flight" for air photography of breath-taking beauty. I saw only a few feet of the film but it was gorgeous.

DID YOU KNOW—

That Roland Young once worked as an architect's apprentice in London?

CHAPTER V

NO CYCLONE CELLAR FOR LOVE

Tommy Knowlton climbed out over the side of the Ferris wheel car.

"I should really be the last man to leave the ship," he said, "but if you slip, I want you to fall on me."

He let himself down along the rim of the Ferris wheel until his feet rested upon a steel string crosspiece of the framework of the great wheel. He called up to the girl:

"Throw your slippers overboard so you can get a toe hold."

When her slippers had flashed past him, he called again: "It's easy if you don't look down!"

"I won't look down," said the girl, grimly, and Knowlton realized that the idea of action, of doing something to escape from their exposed position, had calmed her unstrung nerves. Holding on to a strut with one hand, he clasped her thighs with his other arm and guided her feet to the crosspiece upon which he stood. When she had a firm hold, he lowered himself to the next segment, and repeated the process until finally, after several minutes of strenuous work, they found themselves on the platform at the bottom.

The street was empty of human beings, the carnival completely deserted, but the air was alive with the shrill screaming of the siren, and the flash of bursting bombs and shells sent high into the air by the anti-aircraft guns. Joan's evening gown was badly rent by their wild, rapid and perilous descent. Knowlton held her in his arms for a moment, after lifting her down to the platform, from the last steel crosspiece.

"Brave girl!" he said in her ear, with the utmost conviction. "Now I'll find your slippers."

"Now if we could only find a good cyclone cellar," said Joan, herself again, her joyous spirit reasserting itself now that she was on solid ground.

"Oh, hello, Brick!" he said in a low voice when he recognized his chum.

"I know just the place," said Knowlton, as he knelt and put the retrieved slippers on her feet. He then took her hand and they started running down the street away from the carnival. At every flash and explosion of a bomb dropped by the enemy airplanes, he pulled her hastily into the nearest doorway, shielding her body with his own.

At last they reached the door of the apartment—the "base for operations" that Walters had engaged—and burst into the place, closed the door quickly after them, shutting out entirely the noises from the street and the screeching of the siren.

The room, half-lighted by a rose-shaded table lamp, was to Joan a quiet haven of refuge after the wild perils of their descent from the Ferris wheel and their race along the street.

"Where are we?" she asked, looking confusedly about the room.

"This is your cyclone cellar, darling." With mock formality he added: "Won't you sit down?"

"Oh, is this where you. . . ."

"Yes, this is where I live when I am ashore."

'Look at me," said Joan, with a rueful glance down at her torn and disordered frock. "I'm coming all apart. Have you got a safety pin, by any chance?

"Oh, certainly. I'll pour you one right away!"

He went to the liquor cabinet at the side of the room and poured out a drink of Scotch which he offered her with mock seriousness.

"Fool!" she exclaimed, half in delight at his effrontery, half in dest. "I really do need to pin myself together."

"This will pin you together, darling, and besides, I like you with your hair down."

He pressed the glass into her hand and noticed that she was still trembling from the shock of the exploding shells.

"Here, you'd better sit down." Quickly he arranged the pillows on the davenport which stood against the wall.

Joan sank down upon the pillows and raised her long-lashed eyes to him.

"You must excuse me a little. I've been through this before, you know. It always leaves me shaky."

"You've been through a lot, haven't you."

"No."

"Oh, yes you have. I saw it in your eyes when I first met you. They are the most beautiful eyes I've ever seen, but there's a look in them that . . . well, that shows you've been through a lot," he concluded lamely. He had busied himself casually about the room as he talked, drawing the curtains together to shut out any gleam of light, switching off the table lamp, lighting two wax candles. When that was done, he touched a match to the wood piled ready for use in the fireplace. As the kindling caught fire and the blaze began to leap upward to the larger pieces of wood, he turned and looked thoughtfully at the slender, youthful yet mature figure half-reclining on the davenport.

"You look lovely in the firelight," he said, simply.

"I'm a wreck, and you know it," she responded.

"Then you're the most beautiful wreck I've ever seen." He placed two cushions on the floor beside the davenport and sat down on them, looking up into Joan's face. He took her hand in one of his own, and pressed it against his cheek.

"I think you're the greatest girl I've ever met."

"How can you say that—when you scarcely know me at all?"

"I know you, darling, as well as I ever will. I only want to know you as I know you now."

"But why——"

"Because I'm simply crazy about you."

The girl drew her breath in quickly. "Don't say that!"

"I can't help it."

"But there is something I must tell you——"

"Don't tell me anything," begged Knowlton, rising on his knees on the cushions and taking her face between her hands. "This is our moment. It belongs only to us."

He leaned suddenly down and kissed her lips passionately, felt her hands on his chest, pushing him away. He redoubled his kisses, and the pressure of her hands grew weaker, gradually ceased, and then her lips responded to his, warmly, lingeringly. Knowlton drew back from her for a moment, and looked searchingly into her eyes.

"No regrets, my sweet?"

She reached her arm about his neck and drew his head down upon her breast, and stroked his hair.

"No regrets," she half whispered, searched with her lips for his mouth and kissed him of her own accord.

The two wax candles had burned low in their sockets, the fire in the grate was dying when the silence in the half-darkened room was broken by an imperative knocking on the door. Knowlton arose from the davenport and opened the door cautiously.

"Oh, hello, Brick!" he said in a low voice when he recognized his chum. "What's the emergency?"

"The party's over. We're ordered out to sea."

"All right, Bad News. I'll be with you in a minute."

"Minute my eye! Grab your hat and coat. We'll have to run for it!"

Knowlton closed the door, crossed the room swiftly and picked up his hat and jacket.

"What is it?" asked Joan, sitting up on the davenport.

"Orders to report back to the ship!" replied Knowlton.

"But not right away?" asked the girl, quickly, with an intake of breath.

"Right now. I'll have to take you home."

"Don't worry about me. I can get home by myself."

Knowlton fumbled at his tie in his hurry, but at length it was fixed, and he slipped into his tunic.

"Oh, Joan, you're sweet!" He dropped to his knees on the cushions beside the davenport and took the girl's hands into his own. "I want you to know how much I love you . . . how much you mean to me . . . how the whole world has changed for me because of you."

"There is something I've been trying to tell you," said Joan, hesitated, "but now—"

A sharp and persistent knocking on the door stopped her words, and recalled Knowlton to his duty. He kissed her lips with feverish eagerness, got to his feet, and moved toward the door.

"Tell me when I can come back, darling."

Instead of replying the girl dropped her hands in a gesture of helplessness. As he reached for the door latch, she spoke.

"Goodbye." There was a sort of tragic finality in her voice that caused Knowlton to turn and run quickly back to her.

"Hey, don't say that! This isn't goodbye. I'm coming back—"

Renewed rapping, sharp and warningly, on the door cut short his protest. He wheeled about and started for the door.

"Goodbye," came the steady, sorrowful voice of Joan.

Against the indefinable tragic foreboding in that voice, Knowlton summoned up all his oldtime spirit and gayety.

"Don't keep saying goodbye like that . . . . You frighten me . . . . I'm coming back . . . . I'm coming back."

He said it more loudly the second time, as if to convince himself.

The young woman watched him open the door and close it after him without a backward glance, and her face took on a bleak and desolate look. All the vitality and courage, the gay and reckless spirit which Knowlton had communicated to her drained out of her spirit. Her shoulders drooped, her head lowered, almost as though she were on the point of tears.

"Goodbye, sweetheart," she repeated softly to herself. After a time she looked up and around, like a child suddenly lonely and dwarfed by the immensity of the room in which it finds itself. Slowly she lifted her hands to arrange her hair, and noticed the brass wedding ring which Knowlton had slipped over her finger.

She made a gesture of final resignation, took the ring from her finger, slipped it into a cigarette box on the table, closed the lid, and set about making herself presentable to appear upon the street.

Farm Head Will Speak at Field House

Scheduled to Address C. of C. at Meeting Monday

Edward A. O'Neal, leader in the campaign for farm equality and president of the American Farm Bureau federation, will speak at the university field house tomorrow at 8 p.m. and at the Chamber of Commerce noon luncheon tomorrow at the American Legion Community building.

Charles E. Hearst of Cedar Falls, state president of the Farm Bureau, will introduce Mr. O'Neal to members of the Chamber of Commerce.

The talk before the Chamber of Commerce is to be informal and of especial interest to business and professional men. Residents of nearby communities have been invited to attend the noon luncheon meeting, D. W. Crum, secretary, said yesterday.

Seeks Equality

Mr. O'Neal, for a number of years, has been engaged in work tending toward the equality of agriculture. Having spent most of his life on a cotton plantation, he considers himself a real "dirt farmer." He was born Oct. 26, 1875, near Florence, Ala., where he now operates a 2,600 acre plantation.

He received a B.A. degree from Washington and Lee university and spent one year there in the study of law. Last year, because of his outstanding work for the good of agriculture, he was awarded an honorary degree of "doctor of agriculture" by the Alabama Polytechnic institute at Auburn.

Charter Member

In 1921, after the Farm Bureau movement had spread over the country, Mr. O'Neal joined the Lauderdale county organization as a charter member and became its first president. A year later he became vice president and in 1923 president of the Alabama Farm Bureau organization south of the Mason-Dixon line. He held the office of president for eight years.

He has held various important positions in the national organization, serving as a member of the finance and executive committees; as vice president, and as chairman of the resolutions committee. In the latter post he helped draft the platform of he American Farm Bureau federation each year.

Familiar With Situation

As a member of President Hoover's agricultural conference, as well as in other positions he has held, Mr. O'Neal has met many of the national political leaders and has become familiar with the national situation.

Mr. O'Neal became president of the American Farm Bureau federation in March, 1931, to fill out the term of Sam H. Thompson, who was appointed to the federal farm board by President Hoover. In December, 1931, he was elected by the voting delegates for a two year term.

In July, 1931, President Hoover appointed him to represent organized agriculture on a commission to determine a method of handling the power plant at Muscle Shoals.

He has been active in Washington, D. C. this spring aiding in the development of President Roosevelt's emergency farm relief bill.

GOLD REPEAL

Passes Amid Cries of "Shame"

25.8 grains of gold and pays less than 25.8 grains, Senator Glass, Virginia's former treasury secretary said, "it's repudiation."

Senator Barkley (D. Ky.) contended "the welfare of 120,000,000 people is supreme over any group in the number."

Another former Democratic secretary of the treasury, McAdoo (D. Cal.) agreed with Barkley's statement that the gold clause was nothing more than a "legal fiction."

Chairman Fletcher of the banking committee opened the debate with an appeal for swift action in view of prospective treasury financing and said it would not cost anyone anything.

He opposed elimination of the retroactive provisions, saying this would "destroy the whole act."

"But it wouldn't destroy the credit of the government," Senator Vandenberg (R. Mich.) retorted.

Reed led the Republican attack with the statement the resolution would make a "scrap of paper" of the government's "sacred promise" to pay in gold which he said had been made as recently as six weeks ago.

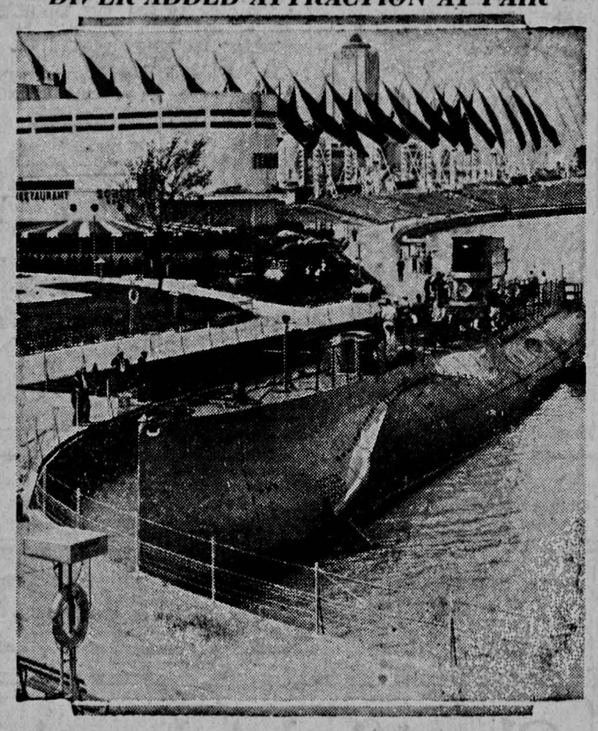
"The honor of the United States is about to sustain a stain that we will not be able to erase for 100 years," he added, and referred to America's criticism of France when she defaulted the debt payment last December.

The final vote found four Republicans, 43 Democrats and the lone Farmer Laborite, Shipstead of Minnesota, supporting the resolution and two Democrats joining 18 Republicans in opposition.

The Republicans voting for it were: Capper of Kansas, Frazier of North Dakota, LaFollette of Wisconsin and Norris of Nebraska.

The two Democrats in opposition were Bulkley of Ohio and Gore of Oklahoma.

DIVER ADDED ATTRACTION AT FAIR



The United States submarine S-49 is shown here as it anchored Friday off the Italian Building at the Chicago World's Fair. The craft made a 2,800-mile trip through the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes to reach the fair. It measures 240 feet from tip to tip and is equipped with two giant 900-horse power motors.

AROUND THE TOWN with DICK FAGAN

Real Summer

Iowa Citians shed their coats yesterday as the mercury climbed to the highest point it has been this year—89 degrees. White flannels, ducks, and linens were very much in evidence. Only two black suits were seen—one worn by a bewhiskered individual of some 70 years.

Some Bouquet

Yesterday a complaint was heard because one man's favorite bouquet was not displayed at the flower show Friday. He said his favorite flower combination was babies buttons and bachelor's breath.

Busy Streets

It seemed almost like Homecoming yesterday in Iowa City with almost 700 alumni coming back for Commencement and class reunions.

Last Foresters

Eleven men, the last group of the Johnson county reforestation allotment, will go to Cedar Rapids Tuesday where they will be detailed to camps. Seven left Friday.

Found

A Chevrolet coach belonging to C. C. Beuter, 615 S. Clinton street, which was stolen sometime after midnight Friday, was found at 4 a.m. yesterday about 600 feet north of Newport, completely burned.

Reforestation

Major Bullard of Des Moines, is expected here this morning to inspect possible sites for a reforestation army camp. While here, Major Bullard, will confer with the reforestation camp site committee of the Chamber of Commerce, which has tentatively selected the canning factory and other sites for the camp.

Judge Upholds Law for Debtor Relief

OTTUMWA, June 3 (AP)—Judge E. K. Daugherty of the Wapello county court in a decision today upheld the debtor relief law extending the time on mortgage foreclosures in the state.

The finding was based on the contention that the obligation of the debtor was not discharged by the extension of time as the lien remained.

Start Dry Campaign

DES MOINES (AP)—Mrs. Ida B Wise Smith, president of the Iowa W.C.T.U., will head a group of speakers Sunday campaigning for retention of the prohibition law. She will speak at Iowa Falls and Webster City. Other speakers are: J. O. Profit-Taking Cuts Values in Stock Market

Heavy Offerings Send Prices Sliding Downward

NEW YORK, June 3 (AP)—Profit-taking cut a swathe through the stock market today and most commodities joined the decline.

Shares spent a busy forenoon, with the ticker lagging a quarter hour or so most of the time. A slight early bulge ran against increased offerings and the market sagged to a heavy closing. Losses of 1 to 3 points were frequent, though Friday's gain was not fully erased. Volume totaled 3,587,720 shares.

Bonds, however, continued to plug along, especially in the second grade rail section.

Losers

Among the larger losers in the share market were American Telephone, Consolidated Gas, the two U. S. Steels, Westinghouse, Union Carbide, Sears Roebuck, American Tobacco "B", American Can, Santa Fe. Louisville & Nashville, and Delaware & Hudson, which fell 2 to 3 points. Case dipped 4 and Du Pont slightly more. Nash, National Distillers, American Sugar, Pere Marquette and Studebaker successfully combated the downward trend. A number of preferreds also firmed.

Friday's strong upsurge had no doubt caused many traders to feel that the market was getting top-heavy or that its enthusiasm might be somewhat outstripping business recovery.

Cheerful Tenor

Other news in which Wall street was interested was largely of cheerful tenor. Freight loadings last week had a percentage rise of 1.9 over a year ago, slightly less than in the previous week, but a gain of about 20,000 cars over a year ago. Volume, incidentally, reached the largest total since Dec. 31, 1932.

Glances toward next week's steel production pointed to a further expansion in mill activity. Automobile output is going forward again to an extent that forecasts a June volume equalling or exceeding that of May.

Set Recruiting Deadline

DES MOINES (AP)—Secretary Ralph Kittinger of the state emergency relief committee said enrollment of Iowa's quota of 4 300 men in the civilian forestry corps will be completed by June 7. It was previously expected that the recruiting would not be completed until June 17.

Election Day Means No Beer in Chicago

CHICAGO, June 3 (AP)—The citizens of Chicago will have no 3.2 per cent beer Monday while they vote on the proposal to delete the eighteenth amendment from the United States constitution.

The corporation counsel ruled so today, saying an ancient city ordinance forbids sale of malt liquors during the hours the polls are open on election day.

Sheriff Meyering said it would be impossible to enforce the order but city police promised to do their best.

KIDNAPER

Faces Possible Death Penalty

as corroborated by McGee's statement, became involved through a promised pleasure trip which turned into a trail of tragedy for them.

McGee, hastening south after Miss McElroy was released from 29 hours imprisonment in a rural home near Shawnee, Kan., picked them up Thursday in Oklahoma City.

Displaying a large roll of money, the couple said, McGee assured them "we are going to have a swell time."

"Honest, I don't know a thing about this," officers quoted Mrs. Johnson. "Windell has been working as an usher at the Isis theater in Oklahoma. We just had a little apartment and I thought it was all right to go on the 'pleasure trip' as they called it. I just thought it would be fun and away we went. Now its all so terrible."

Needed Help

McGee told officers he needed Johnson and Gilbert to help change the ransom money, which he suspected was marked. More than $9,000 was recovered from the five person arrested at Amarillo and Lucille Cates, McGee's divorced wife. Miss Cates and Abe Starr, Leavenworth junk dealer, through whom the gang hoped to purchase cars, officers said, were held as material witnesses.

Miss McElroy appeared before the grand jury and repeated the story of her abduction.

Her testimony of how she was forced from a bath by two men armed with shotguns, taken to a house near Shawnee, Kan., chained to a wall 29 hours until ransomed by her father, paralleled closely McGee's confession.

Goes Before Jury

The city mnager also went before the grand jury. Later he expressed great satisfaction with the rapidly moving situation.

At a police "show up" Clarence L. Click, named by McGee as one of the principles in the plot, admitted only that he had been convicted in Ft. Scott, Kan., Jan. 15, 1930, for forgery. Police denied a rumor Click attempted suicide at city jail, but he entered the "show up" heavily manacled and under guard.

With a promise of federal prosecution against the eight persons indicted if "other than a substantial sentence" results in state court, police intensified their efforts to capture the two fugitives.

An all night search was continued today in the vicinity of Shawnee, Kan., where E. C. Reppert, director of police said George McGee was seen as recently as last night.

Grain Market Prices Show Distinct Fall

CHICAGO, June 3 (AP)—Heavy selling found the grain markets bare of any adequate support from buyers today, and prices lurched downward.

Disturbance of market conditions followed statements attributed to the secretary of agriculture that speculative price advance of late in stocks, cotton and grains had interfered with operation of the farm relief act, especially efforts to take cotton lands out of production. Another statement ascribed to him indicated that there would be no control measure for the 1933 United States wheat crop.

Wheat closed nervous at almost the days bottom figures, 1 3-8, 1 5-8 under yesterday's finish, corn 1-2, 3-4 down; oats 1-8, 1-2 off, and provisions unchanged to 20 cents decline.

Staggering effects of Washington statements regarded as official became quickly apparent, and wheat prices reeled downward almost 2 cents in some cases.

Favorable weather for completion of field work was a bearish factor as to corn and oats.

Provisions sagged with grains, despite steadiness of hog values.

Closing indemnities: Wheat, July 70 3-8, 1-2, 73, 73 1-8; September 72 3-8, 1-2, 75, 75 1-8; December 75 3-8, 77 3-4. Corn, July 43 1-4, 1-2, 44 3-4, 7-8; September 45 3-4, 7-8, 47 1-2, 5-8; December 48 3-4, 50, 50 1-8.

Civil Officers in North Dakota Gain Control of Capitol

BISMARCK, N. D., June 3 (AP)—Civil officers were back in control of the new state capitol building site tonight.

Military rule was terminated by Gov. Wm. Langer, who proclaimed martial law Thursday because the laborers strike underway since May 16 threatened continued disorder. The strike was settled and work on the $2,000,000 building went forward today.

Although the entire city of 11,000 persons was included in the scope of the proclamation, national guardsmen confined activities to the bilduing area during the martial law period. Civil agencies elsewhere continued to function at the governor's instructions.

Oil Burners and Burning Oils

Three years ago, we installed the first "ELECTROL" oil burner in Iowa City. During those three years, that burner has never missed a function nor has the owner paid one cent for service or repairs. (His name given on your request). Furthermore, his heat has averaged $10.00 per year less with his ELECTROL than with coal. This marvelous record has been duplicated by many in Iowa City. When YOU consider burning oil, don't say "I want an oil burner"; say "I want an ELECTROL."
