John Ottley, Atlanta Financier, Escapes After Being Kidnaped

Abductors Ask $40,000 - Get Less Than $10

ATLANTA, July 6 (AP)—John King Ottley, 65 year old financier and sportsman, was kidnaped in downtown Atlanta today, then out-talked one of his abductors and escaped a few hours later near Suwanee, 30 miles north of here.

17 Year Old Boy Captured

One of the abductors—a 17 year old boy was left to guard Mr. Ottley while his companion delivered a note to the Ottley home in Atlanta—was arrested and led a posse to a retreat where authorities laid a trap for the other abductor, an older man.

Older Abductor

The older abductor returned to Atlanta to deliver the note and the boy was left alone with Mr. Ottley. The banker said the boy apparently "didn't know what it was all about" and he succeeded in talking himself free.

211 Defy Government by Hoarding of Gold

WASHINGTON, July 6 (AP)—Two hundred and eleven persons are defying the government to come and take their gold despite warnings by Justice department agents that prosecution might follow their failure to turn in the metal.

Attorney General Cummings said today in disclosing the number of persons who had refused to return their gold that almost two million dollars of the metal had been returned last week as a result of the department of justice campaign to force gold hoarders to disgorge. It brought to $26,067,133 the total amount he said had been returned from hoards.

County Forges on to Recovery

By DICK FAGAN
(City Editor, The Daily Iowan)

In line with President Roosevelt's policies for national recovery, Johnson county is forging ahead aggressively and rapidly out of depression. Encouraged by a rise in farm produce prices and the generous terms offered in the federal public works recovery act, executive, commercial, and legislative bodies throughout the county are planning extensive public improvements.

city council and the Iowa City Chamber of Commerce thus far. Beginning in the spring with an ambitious 14-point program which included projects of securing a camp site for the restoration army, promotion of a paving program for the county, effecting a settlement of difficulties between property owners and the university to expedite construction on the fine arts building, establishment of a state park, investigation for a sewage disposal plant, obtaining of funds for private building, a renovating campaign, and other projects, the Chamber of Commerce has worked steadily completing one project and there are indications that many of the others will become reality.

Chamber of Commerce to work on securing a suitable camp site for the restoration army, the camp was placed here. Both Dr. Bywater and Colonel Lewis spent much of their time for about five weeks in looking over camp sites, interviewing state and federal officials, and finally located the camp at the airport park south of town.

Gov. Herring Okays Budget of University

Approves Expenditure of $562,943 for Next 3 Months

A budget for the University of Iowa for the next three months was among the financial allotments approved yesterday by Gov. Clyde Herring, an Associated Press dispatch from Des Moines yesterday said.

Total allotments of $1,468,643 for the July, August, and September operations of institutions under the state board of education were approved. Out of this sum, $598,093 is anticipated from fees and tuitions, and the rest will be paid out of state appropriations.

Do Away With Useless Work, Says Douglas

Budget Director Weeds Out Non-Essentials in Building Plan

WASHINGTON, July 6 (AP)—Strict weeding out of non-essential construction projects from the government's public works program was advocated today by Director Lewis W. Douglas of the budget as he assisted President Roosevelt in scanning the long list of undertakings proposed by the special public works board.

The budget director, after conferring with the president, emphasized that he was seeking caution in the big expenditure plan and that he was urging emphatically that the states be required to show balanced budgets before they be allowed to participate.

Mr. Roosevelt, who some time ago urged that only useful projects be included in the $3,300,000,000 building program, was expected to cull the list considerably.

The president today called in Secretary Wallace, George N. Peek, the farm relief administrator, and Hugh S. Johnson, industrial administrator, to work out an agreement whereby industries would be delegated to the agricultural administration. Both agriculture and justice departments are investigating the question of food price increases.

Johnson postponed presenting his report on the cotton textile industry code because of other business.

One matter still to be threshed out in relation to the cotton code, first to be submitted and the only so far subjected to a hearing, was the proposal for elimination of the "stretch-out" system from the cotton mills. This is a method whereby individual employees are given increasing numbers of machines to tend.

However, it did not appear that the report on this angle would be awaited before the code was put before the president for study.

Douglas' stand for making advances only to states with balanced finances was in keeping with a provision of the law authorizing the chief executive to withhold funds from states which have not adjusted their affairs.

Announcement of the projects to be started immediately is expected soon after the president concludes his study of the list.

The public works administration today named Robert Kohn of New York to take charge of housing and homestead subsistence work.

Army Engineers to Consider 9-Foot Missouri River Channel

Plan Personal Tour From Dakota to St. Louis About July 13

WASHINGTON, July 7 (AP)—The U. S. army board of engineers for rivers and harbors will make a personal tour of inspection along the Missouri river from Yankton, S. D., to St. Louis starting July 13 to study the feasibility of a 9-foot channel development, it was announced today.

The engineers plan to arrive in Sioux City, Ia., on July 13, motor to Yankton, and begin an automobile trip along the river's course. They expect to examine work already completed or begun and study prospects of further improvement.

Their report to Maj. Gen. Lytle Brown, chief of army engineers, will deal with the Missouri river as a 9-foot channel project, other surveys having had in mind a 6-foot channel. Much depends upon the report made by these engineers, sponsors of the project believe.

It is understood that completion of the 6-foot channel to Sioux City is included in a list of projects submitted to the public works board by the war department.

The proponents of further development, however, have their hopes set on a 9-foot channel. They look on the $3,300,000,000 public works program as an opportunity to realize that dream, and are making strenuous efforts to convince army engineers and administrative officials of its soundness.

A set-back came to the project, however, when Col. George R. Spalding, division engineer, recently reported that prospective tonnage on the river was not sufficient to justify the necessary expenditure. In a recent hearing before the army board, the proponents attempted to refute his statements.

Friends of the 9-foot channel development look to President Roosevelt for support, since he has already expressed approval of the project in general.

Seven engineers make up the army board, but it is expected that not more than three will make the Yankton-St. Louis trip. Captain Wyman, district engineer, who recently recommended the 9-foot channel development, will probably accompany the group.

Romance Fades as Tugboats Replace 'Wheelers' on River

By JAMES H. STREET
GREENVILLE, Miss. (AP)—Yankee ingenuity has turned the moody old Mississippi into a pack-horse for world trade.

A boat from the south has steamed into Lake Michigan by a direct route, the deep Lakes-to-Gulf channel. The bands played "Yankee Doodle" and "Dixie." The folks cheered. But really the music was a requiem for an era of steamboating that has gone forever, an elegy for the glamorous days when the Mississippi was the head man of the river clan.

It's just another river now, and soon men will be running over it, swapping iron for cotton and steel for coffee.

The new boats don't use roustaunts. Neither do they push "mark twain" as their barges push through shoals. A wireless system cracks out orders. The whistles are pert, saucy things, and their blasts are far cries from the deep growls that have echoed in the valley for 100 years.

There will be no roustaunts roosting on the safety valves, no cooing on the hurricane deck, no banjo music in the moonlight, no catfish and compone in the galley. The old packets are falling apart and a new day for river travel has come. Power, not speed, is the order of the times on the river.

The little boats—raskish and cocky like a bantam rooster—take the huge barges on their noses, and shove them from Chicago to New Orleans. Past the groaning gates of the Illinois locks, and into the Mississippi, where the tow straightens out and heads south for the bayous and levees.

Big men and big horses and big plows work the land, and corn rustles in the hot prairie air of Illinois. Illinois farmers are too busy to notice the boats—there's plowing to be done.

Mules graze on the gumbo lands of Missouri, tobacco waves lazily in Kentucky. Cypress trees troop to the river in Tennessee, and cotton blooms in the shelter of Arkansas levees.

Big men and big mules and big plows work the land, and cotton sways in the swamp winds of the delta. The farmers here stop and watch the tows. They are never too busy to watch a boat, even if there is plowing to be done.

Around the bend and through the shoals—weaving like a drunken dragon—churning and panting and whining, the boats push past the black river country, where the magnolias and jasmamines lean over the Mississippi and almost brush the tows as they pass.

Then around the crescent into New Orleans, where big boats take the cargoes: Steel from Superior to Singapore, coal from Chicago to Siam.

U. S. Orders Arrest of 8

Sought for Connection With Kansas City Slaying

KANSAS CITY, July 6 (AP)—The department of justice today ordered the arrest of Charles (Pretty Boy) Floyd, Oklahoma killer; five escaped Kansas convicts; Verne C. Miller, former Huron, S. D., sheriff; and William Weissman in connection with the machine gun slaying of four officers and their prisoner, Frank Nash, at the union station plaza here June 17.

The announcement by Director of Police Reppert that Miller and Weissman were known to have had a part in the slaughter was followed today by the appearance of circulars issued by the U. S. bureau of investigation, asking for the arrest of Floyd and the five convicts.

The circulars were issued at Washington under the direction of J. Edgar Hoover, director of the bureau. They named Harvey Bailey, Wilbur Underhill, Ed Davis, James Clark and Robert G. Brady, who escaped from the Kansas penitentiary Memorial day, and Floyd.

The circulars bore the pictures of the six men, described them minutely and stated they are sought in the "murder of Otto Reed, chief of police at McAlester, Okla.; William J. Grooms and Frank E. Hermanson, police officers of Kansas City, Mo.; Raymond J. Gaffrey, special agent of the United States bureau of investigation; and their prisoner, Frank Nash, at Kansas City, Mo., June 17, 1933."

In addition the department asked the arrest of Harry J. Garner and Bernard Phillips for complicity in the killings.

Bailey was said by police to have been a close friend of Nash, who was slain in the attempt to effect his escape. Bailey was the leader of the prison break Memorial day in which the warden, Kirk Prather, was kidnapped. He was identified through a photograph by a station usher as the man who inquired the time of arrival of the train bringing Nash from Arkansas to Kansas City.

Competition of Railways Like 'Poker Game'

Capitalist Describes Strategic Buying at Investigation

WASHINGTON, July 6 (AP)—Competition between the great eastern trunk line railroads in buying up strategic competing lines in the prosperous days of early 1929 was likened to a "poker game" before the senate banking committee today by Frank E. Taplin, a Cleveland capitalist whose family reaped more than $11,000,000 profit from one of the sales.

Late in the day, Taplin told the committee he set up trust accounts for his children to lessen his income tax.

The statement was made after Ferdinand Pecora, committee counsel, said his investigation showed Taplin, as trustee for his son, lowered his income tax for 1929 by $374,921. In that year he filed his return as an investor, although in 1926 a deduction had been claimed as a dealer in securities.

Appearing at the last session of the committee before its adjournment until October, Taplin readily told how he sold under an "oral" agreement 22,930 shares of stock in the Pittsburgh and West Virginia railroad to the Pennroad corporation, the Pennsylvania railroad holding company, in 1929 at a price far in excess of the market, after negotiating with other trunk lines.

Marked divergences of viewpoint existed even among the American delegates as to whether the conference could effectively continue, crippled as it appeared to be. Some said privately they would have favored a recess.

In addition to the support of Prime Minister Bennett and Mr. Chamberlain, a number of smaller countries outside the steering committee joined in supporting continuation of the assembly. These included Japan, Sweden, Mexico and China.

One of the most important victories of the day was for President Roosevelt's tariff trustee, which would have expired had the conference adjourned.

This was explained in important conference quarters as a vital factor in the stand taken by some gold group members who wished to be relieved from their commitment to the trustee so as to be free to raise tariffs should the dollar depreciate further.

DIAL 4191 Branch exchange connecting all departments. FRIDAY, JULY 7, 1933

America on the Spot: WALTER LIPPMANN joined his voice yesterday to the bedlam of criticism of the president's technique in handling the London economic conference.

Although it is conceivable that association in the London atmosphere would lead most individuals into acceptance of these views, it is difficult to understand Mr. Lippmann's conversion.

President Roosevelt's message to the conference was, it appeared from here, the first honest attempt since the conference gathered to meet the realities of the situation face to face, frankly.

One European statesman, as Mr. Lippmann pointed out, objected to the president's vigorous language on the ground that "we are not children" and do not have to be chastised by the president of the United States.

These twin developments will probably have a powerful effect upon the action of the state legislatures which intend to consider ratification during the next two years.

Once child labor has been abandoned—whether voluntarily or under coercion—nothing should be allowed to sanction its return at the expiration of the two year tenure of the industrial codes.

When the amendment has finally been adopted it will be necessary to bring immediate pressure to bear on congress for the passage of legislation to provide for complete regulation of child labor.

Science Doesn't Stop: REVELATIONS OF the astounding progress that has been achieved in the field of science during these dark days of depression are heartening to those who thought that a plug in the stock market was the standstill sign for advance of ever kind.

Probably the most revolutionary of all the new inventions reported at the recent meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in Chicago was the telescope which, according to the inventor, Dr. Vladimir K. Zworykin, will make obsolete all the complicated contraptions so far devised by experimenters with television.

These problems, like similar ones in the early days of the radio, are not simple. Television will operate independently of radio, according to Dr. Zworykin, and will be broadcast on a wave about six meters long.

This will require the installation of innumerable transmitter stations to carry television broadcasts from one part of the country to another because, the scientist explains, no satisfactory method has been found to link television stations by wire and the broadcasts on such short waves cannot be transmitted beyond the horizon. Various proposals already have been made for financing the new service. Indications are that it will be supported much in the same manner as radio itself, by advertising, although the radio commission might have something to say about that.

Progress toward the final realization of democracy in the United States is moving forward with surprising rapidity beneath the whirling surface of events. There is a certain satisfaction in cynicism, but one would be unseeing indeed if he were unable to detect in today certain unmistakable signs of a rational civilization of tomorrow.

One of the most heartening of all the multitude of movements which point to an awakening social consciousness is the recently accelerated interest in the problem of child labor and its eradication.

The story of the fight against the evil of child labor is a long and eventful one. Twice congress attempted to institute a federal child labor law, but the supreme court held consistently that the constitution confers no powers to regulate directly labor conditions in the several states.

Thwarted on this front, an amendment was submitted to the states in 1924 which would give congress the necessary authority. For eight years this amendment appeared to be practically stranded because of indifference and opposition.

Spurred by three years of depression and faced with new and astounding revelations of the exploitation of children in factories, seven more states—Oregon, Washington, North Dakota, Ohio, Michigan, New Hampshire, and New Jersey—ratified and five more are expected to add their names to the list before the end of the year.

The announcement that the National Industrial Recovery administration will ban the use of child labor during the two year period of its operation has undoubtedly acted as an effective impetus to the movement.

These twin developments will probably have a powerful effect upon the action of the state legislatures which intend to consider ratification during the next two years.

With only a few state legislatures meeting next year prospects for ratification of the constitutional amendment by the requisite three fourths of the states is hardly possible before the expiration of the industrial recovery act in 1935.

When the amendment has finally been adopted it will be necessary to bring immediate pressure to bear on congress for the passage of legislation to provide for complete regulation of child labor.

From Jean Christophe, by Romain Rolland) "Nature was not made for us. We try to quell her. It is a struggle. How are we to win? By being kind. To pluck one's armour of selfishness, to breathe, to love life, light, one's humble work, the little corner of the earth where one's roots are spread.

All this was looked upon now not with indifference, as something natural, mere bourgeois comfort, as it had been regarded before, but as a supreme joy, which only the years of hunger had taught us to feel.
