NEW YORK, Aug. 22 (AP)—Fifteen venomous and exceedingly bad-tempered snakes arrived from the Malay peninsula today and greeted the reception committee by sticking out their tongues.
Carol Stryker, director of the Staten Island museum, and C. H. Pope, snake authority from the American Museum of Natural History, fairly tore open the crates to see what manner of prizes they had given.
Flying Snakes
In one crate they found four flying snakes, curious reptiles that flatter themselves out and glide from tree to tree like squirrels. Stryker said he believed they were the first flying snakes ever to reach this country alive. When Pope pulled one of them out of the box it thrashed about wildly for a moment and then slithered up his coat sleeve.
A city of them went up from the members of the crew who had returned close enough to watch the operations, but Pope laughed reassuringly and said, "This fellow is only mildly poisonous."
Three Feet Long
The specimens, which with the others will be sent to the newly organized Staten Island zoo, were about three feet long and brightly colored. They are constrictors, feeding chiefly on lizards.
There were 25 snakes when the consignment left the hands of St. Alban Smith, who captured them, but 10 died in transit. One of those still alive was a fat coiled snake known as a Kratt, which Stryker said natives in Indiana dread more than the King Cobra.
The Kratt's crate wasn't opened.

Saving at The Spigot

A PETITION now being circulated on the campus, and one which has the backing of a considerable number of faculty members and students, asks that the university reconsider the proposed closing of the university tennis courts in the four weeks between academic sessions.

The closing of the courts, something new here, has been suggested by the grounds and buildings department as a means of economizing, the inference being that the least necessary things are to be chopped off first.

But one wonders whether the department is not going at its economizing at the wrong end. The cost of maintaining at least a part of the courts would be small in comparison with many of the activities of the department.

And when one realizes that the university courts are practically the only ones available in Iowa City to students and faculty members, the action of the tennis players in asking reconsideration becomes justifiable.

The final decision on the question will probably rest with President Eugene A. Gilmore when he returns to Iowa City this morning. THE DAILY IOWAN hopes he will not overlook the fact that several hundred tennis playing students and faculty members will be in residence here during the four weeks, and that the courts offer them almost the only medium of athletic recreation.

The equipment, property of the athletic department, is available. The only extra cost is the small expense of upkeep on the few courts which Iowa's tennis players ask to be kept open. Closing the courts entirely may mean saving at the wrong end.

Iowa City—New Art Center

IOWA CITY'S growing importance as a center of art in Iowa and the middle west became increasingly apparent in its outstanding successes in the salon of art at the Iowa State fair which opened yesterday in Des Moines.

The salon this year is larger than ever before. Though some artists may disagree on the rather conservative judging, it is significant that Iowa Citizens and artists working here under Grant Wood on the Public Works of Art project practically "stole the show."

The tendencies and events which have brought Iowa City to the fore in art have been numerous in the last two years. Of first importance are the construction of the new fine arts building on the west campus and the selection of Iowa City as the scene of state Public Works of Art activities.

But even before this, Iowa City and the university were rapidly approaching artistic interest of an unusual degree. The university was made a depository for the works of the famous Swedish sculptor, David Edstrom, and the valuable Davenport art collection was donated to the university, to become a part of its permanent collection.

In this last year the university salon of art attracted considerable attention. It remained only for Grant Wood and his men to centralize public interest to the point where Iowa City was really "art-conscious."

The results of this growing art appreciation will be seen here this fall. Already two worthy projects have been announced, through the efforts of Mrs. Mildred W. Pelzer, one of the winners at the state fair salon. In one of these Iowa City will have a monthly one-man display in a local store. The other will offer Iowa Citizens the opportunity to borrow famous Iowa paintings to hang in their homes, as one borrows books from a public library.

This is only the beginning. The time is not far distant when Iowa's cornfield culture will be a tremendous factor in America's art.

What Others Think

Genius of the Negro (From the Chicago Tribune) The influence of the Negro genius for music has been so important that an event like the music spectacle, "O Sing a New Song," to take place at Soldiers' field Saturday evening, seems overdue.

Negro expression in music and folk art, and it will present the evolution of the Negroes' contribution from its primitive beginnings to its present stage. This contribution has brought so much that is vivid and colorful to the related arts of music and the dance that it has claimed increasing attention at home and abroad, and the spectacle at Soldiers' field will undoubtedly be memorable. We like to think of American culture as the product of the genius of many peoples, and that of the Negro for song and dance, for laughter and pathos, and an irresistible joy of living is an important contribution and deserves its special recognition.

Brass and Impudence

(From The Philadelphia Bulletin) "The masher," said Hilary K. Adair, San Francisco detective, "is a hard fish to land. His brass and impudence nearly always get him off. The wife of one of my clients said to her husband at a matinee: 'Do you see that young man with the waxed mustache and pink necktie over there? Well, he's been ogling me for the last hour.' 'I'll speak to him,' said the husband. In a few minutes he came back. 'Well,' said his wife, 'did he apologize, or what?' 'He apologized—in a way,' her husband told her. 'He said he was looking for his mother, and he thought for some time that you were she.'"

Harlem sighed the other day when street department workers came to the corner of Seventeenth avenue and 131st street with saws and axes and cut down the Tree of Hope.

The tree had to go because the city was widening Seventeenth street, and Harlem did not complain. But the news stories tell of great crowds of sad-eyed dusky men and women who stood silently and sighed.

The Tree of Hope was the wishing well for Harlem's Negro actors. Legend has it that an unemployed actor once stood beneath the tree and fervently wished for a job. He immediately got it, and news of the tree's potent power spread rapidly.

Nobody knows just when that was, or the age of the tree, but since that time Negro actors, great and unknown, have passed beneath the swaying branches of the wishing tree to wish or to give thanks for past favors.

Among these, it is said, have been Paul Robson, singer and actor; Bill Robinson, tap dancer; Ethel Waters, and the late Florence Mills and Bert Williams.

Natives of Harlem quickly cleaned the street of limbs and branches from the tree, and broke bits from the trunk as souvenirs.

Probably to arouse enthusiasm for the nationwide housing campaign now being pushed by the federal government, three foreign housing experts began Tuesday a tour of inspection which will take them to 36 American cities.

Valuable pointers on England's phenomenal program will be given by Sir Raymond Unwin, former president of the Royal Academy of Architects and Great Britain's leading authority on city planning, and Miss A. Mellor Samuel, member of the council of the Society of Women Housing Estate Managers. Comparisons between German developments and American projects will be made by Ernest Kahn, former manager of municipal housing developments at Frankfurt-am-Main.

In New York the English authorities expressed surprise that the depression in America had not brought a boom in the building industry as it did in Great Britain.

There, they reported, the depression and resulting low prices of building materials resulted in an immense natural stimulation of construction.

It is a significant difference. Here, in spite of low prices for both materials and labor, building continued to sink along with other activity. The reason apparently is to be found in the realm of finance, where one is able to find the monkey wrench stopping all the wheels of recovery in this country.

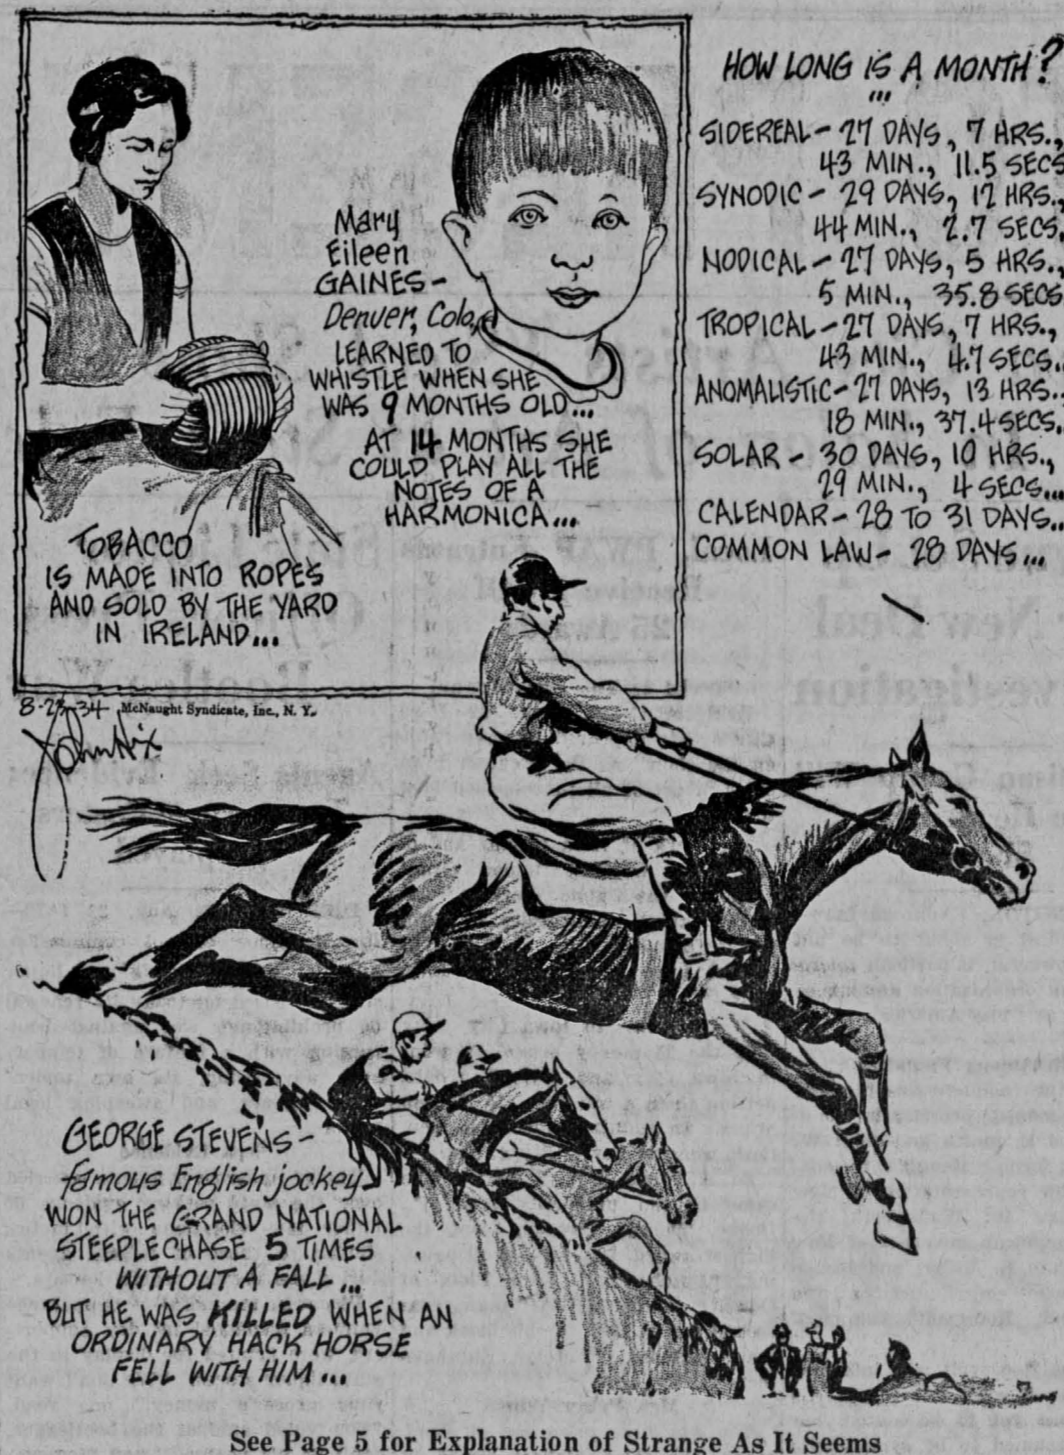

It is notable that England's banking structure never wavered throughout the depression, while ours crumbled like a house of cards. There credit for cheap building was readily available. Here credit for anything became a vague historic abstraction, until it was necessary for the government to assume many of the functions of the country banker.

This failure of the American banking system is the excuse for the formation of the Federal Housing Administration, through which the government opens the spigots of bank credit with a persuasive 100 per cent guarantee against losses up to 20 per cent of total loans.

Thus the government expresses its confidence in the fundamental soundness of America's productive capacity, and its dissatisfaction with the sluggishness of its credit machinery. The fact that the government itself is largely responsible for this sluggishness because it has almost forcibly overloaded the banks with government bonds does not alter the fact that there is no credit available in regular credit channels.—Don Pryor

Behind The Scenes in HOLLYWOOD By Harrison Carroll

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—Even though Helen Hayes and Charles MacArthur are frequently separated by a continent, there is never a dull moment in their married life. When the star went home the other night after a long day's work in "What Every Woman Knows," she found a florist's box about the size of a steamer trunk. Inside were dozens of gardenias with a centerpiece of orchids. Also the following note from Charlie: "Our anniversary is sometime this week. I hope this is the day." After enjoying a good laugh Helen wired back: "You're getting warmer. Keep guessing."

Mrs. E. F. Mason "Dabbles In Clay," Reveals Talent

(Editor's note—This is another in a series of articles about Iowa City women and their activities, written by Betty Reed, society editor of The Daily Iowan.)

Although a comparative novice in the art, Mrs. Edward F. Mason has shown outstanding talent during her two years as a sculptor.

In addition to her class projects in the graphic and plastic arts department, where she has studied for two years under Harry E. Stinson, Mrs. Mason has modeled five portraits of Iowa citizens, including life-like replicas of children.

Results of Mrs. Mason's "dabbling in clay" were exhibited in a student salon last March. In this display, Mrs. Mason entered three of her creations, the portrait of Prof. Fred Lazell winning first by popular vote upon the entire exhibit.

Entered Exhibit
During the graphic and plastic arts exhibit and demonstration for Commencement week, she entered portraits of two students, Mary Lou Forbrick, G of Chicago, and Robert Reich, A2 of Eatonown, N. J., and of Florence Brown, Iowa City teacher. Although most of her work has been head portraiture, Mrs. Mason has just completed a head and shoulder statue of Homer R. Dill, mounted upon a pedestal, and a light bronze thimble cast of Sally Barnes, daughter of Prof. and Mrs. Harry G. Barnes.

Mrs. Mason has "picked up" her modeling in the last two years when she carried out a long-felt interest in sculpture by enrolling in the university art department. She intends to take a course in painting this year.

Graduate of Idaho
Mrs. Mason attributes her ability to accomplish much in a short time to the practice she received while working on her B.A. degree, which was conferred upon her after only three and a half school years, and at the same time keeping house and taking care of her small son.

A graduate of the University of Idaho, Mrs. Mason taught primary grades in Boise and Moscow, Idaho, schools. Proof that she is an adept teacher as well as talented sculptor is evidenced by her election to membership in Pi Lambda Theta, honorary professional education sorority. In Iowa City she is affiliated with chapter HI of PEO.

Yanks, Cleveland Split; Gomez Scores Shutout in First, 9 to 0; Harder Wins Nightcap, 10 to 4

New Yorkers Gain Half Game on Tigers; Bill Dickey Splits Digit

NEW YORK, Aug. 22 (AP)—Mel Harder, the slender hurler whose relief pitching carried the American league to victory over the National league in the all-star game, spoiled a golden opportunity for the New York Yankees to close up the gap between the Yanks and the pennant-poled Detroit Tigers today.

After Vernon (Goody) Gomez had shut out the Cleveland Indians with two hits to win the opening game of a doubleheader, 9 to 0, the Yankees bumped into young Harder and while he was tappered for 10 hits he left 11 New Yorkers stranded on the bases and led the Tribe to a 10 to 4 triumph in the nightcap.

Pick Up Half Game Deprived of a clean sweep of the two game program, the Yankees nevertheless picked up half a game on the Tigers who were tamed by the Washington Senators.

Gomez, in rare high form, was the whole show in the first game, blanking the Tribesmen with two hits for his second successive shut out, his eighth consecutive victory of the campaign. Gomez's victory today led him with Dizzy Dean of the St. Louis Cardinals for the most wins in both major leagues.

Babe Ruth's double with the bases full accounted for the first three runs, while successive singles by Lazzari, Gomez and Crossett with a pass to Ruth and Gehrig's singles produced four more in the fourth and chased Bill Pearson to the showers.

Share Victory Harder shared credit for the nightcap victory with Hal Trosky and Odell "Bad News" Hale. The latter two led the attack on three Yankee pitchers—Jimmy Deshong, Johnny Murphy and Johnny Broaen.

Babe Ruth, the Yankees' star batsman, split a finger on his swinging hand with two out in the sixth of the second game and Arndt Jepsen finished the game back of the plate for the New Yorkers.

Group to Act On Villhauer

Fire, Police Body Will Settle Question On Health

Whether Louie J. Villhauer, Iowa City fireman, will be allowed to return to work or be forced to retire because of ill health will be decided by the fire and police commission, probably early next week.

Mr. Villhauer last night attributed the ailment which kept him from work the week preceding Aug. 13 to the heat, and said that he was sufficiently recovered to resume his duties. He said, however, that he had not been able to obtain a written statement to that effect from his physician, as demanded by Fire Chief Herman Amish, but maintained that it is not legally necessary.

Mr. Villhauer is receiving full pay until his case has been decided by the fire and police commission. His position is being filled by Clarence Amelton, whose appointment as an extra fireman was authorized by the city council at its last meeting.

Mayor Harry D. Broene denied an appeal by Villhauer from Fire Chief Amish's decision, and referred the matter to the commission for final settlement. The commission, composed of Carl Cone, C. O. Palmer and Charles Bauer, will meet as soon as City Attorney Thomas E. Martin returns to Iowa City.

When work is in full swing at the factory, mattresses will be turned out by approximately 100 men and women, working in shifts, and will be given to local needy. F. A. Zitelman is in charge of the work.

Men Were Right; Women Eighth Of Time Pretty Selves

CHICAGO, Aug. 22 (AP)—Men have more or less suspected this all along but didn't dare say much about it.

Today, however, it became semi-official when the American Cosmetics association in convention here estimated that the average American woman spends about one-eighth of her time beautifying herself; the wealthy woman one-sixth of her time; and the actress one-fourth.

And Doris Lee Leeds, manager of a Chicago beauty shop, not a bit abashed by the time the average zonal has lost (so far unestimated) waiting while the wife or girl friend primped, had nerve enough to commend the women.

"It's necessary and essential that the business girl attend to her appearance because beauty gives her the edge in salesmanship," she said, adding it was just as important for the wealthy woman to beautify herself to safeguard her position.

PREMIER BIRDMEN IN NATIONAL AIR RACES LINEUP

The National Air races at Cleveland's gigantic airport, Aug. 31 to Sept. 3, will be a "man's show" with only the cream of the world's professional flyers participating since officials declared neither amateurs nor women pilots are skilled enough to meet the stiff competition. Here are some of the ace birdmen who will perform before the stiff-necked stands: (1) Roy Hunt, who will engage in an aerial "dog fight" with Art Davis (3); (2) Milo Burcham, stunt flyer; (4) Wiley Post, twice round-the-globe flyer; (5) Col. Roscoe Turner, speed king, who will compete in the cross-continental race; (6) James G. Haizlip, contender in the 100-mile Thompson trophy race for which the qualifying speed has been boosted to 225 miles per hour; and (7) Lieut. Richard R. L. Atcherly, of the British Royal Air Force whose ground scraping wing stunts have made him popular.

Britt Celebrates Hobo Day; Hoboes Eat Slumgullion

BRITT, Aug. 22 (AP)—With a full day of celebration Britt today observed its second annual hobo day, commemorating its famous hoax tramp convention of 1900.

A hobo "jungle" near the railroad tracks had a large population which partook of slumgullion supplied by the town as the local residents and visitors celebrated.

The celebration started off with a mile-long parade and continued throughout the day with entertainment, sports and contests. Addressed by Gov. Clyde Herring and George Patterson of Burt, Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, featured the speaking program.

The day commemorated the stunt of 34 years ago when Britt scheduled an international hobo convention and then fooled the reading public with its stories of the event when hoboes failed to appear.

Last year the town held a celebration on the date of the convention but did not invite any real hoboes to be present. However, many appeared and were supplied with food by the town so this feature was continued for the uninvited guests this year.

Observe Diamond Jubilee of Oil

Memorial at first oil well site, Titusville, Pa. The world this year celebrates the diamond jubilee of petroleum—the seventy-fifth anniversary of the pioneering work of "Col." Edward L. Drake, who scorned his neighbor's mockery and drilled the first oil well in history near Titusville, Pa. The first trickle of "black gold" was small, but it was the harbinger of a flood that poured 947,000,000 barrels of crude oil into the American market last year.

TITUSVILLE, Pa. (I.L.N.)—The eyes of the world are turning toward this little town in honor of the diamond jubilee of petroleum.

Seventy-five years ago, black-haired Edwin Laursance Drake left his railroad train conductorship to move here and drill the first oil well in history. "Drake's Folly" was the term used in the surrounding countryside to describe the labor of making a hole in the ground to be able to scoop up a strange oil which was used by some as a medicine and by others as a novel illuminating fuel.

Almost three quarters of a century has passed since the world first saw the strange looking well towers, viewed the spouting "black" flood, heard the hiss of escaping gas, and drew back at the fury of its first oil field fire.

Has World Sources
Oil has moved into the rhythm of the civilized world. It has become a virtual "staff of life." In far off Turkistan, lumbering camels carry on their backs various American oil corporation trade marks. Persian derricks mark the vast region where the Royal Shah and the British government are partners in scooping up liquid wealth out of the ground near the Red sea. In Venezuela, Rumania, Nicaragua, Bolivia, Manchukuo and the Holy Land an unceasing struggle of capital for control of the oil fields has been waged.

Behind the scenes of automobile engines and flaring lamps, behind great warships and wars lies the great quest for oil. Man has discovered a multitude of human utilities in the black flowing oil and has made it indispensable. When oil wells began to produce cheap lighting fuel a market was instantly available, making "Drake's Folly" return a handsome profit. A few years later, the first "big gusher" in history spouted 600 barrels a day to make more than $4,000,000 for its owner in less than 18 months. Prospectors flowed into the region surrounding Titusville, and the landscape soon was dotted with thousands of wooden derricks. Chaos reigned and prices fluctuated from $20 a barrel one day to 10 cents a barrel a few days later.

Rockefeller Forges Empire
Into the confusion stepped the tight-lipped, former commission merchant from Cleveland, Ohio—John D. Rockefeller who forged for himself an empire of oil that eventually encircled the world, containing within its domain steel, coal, railroads and water power riches. Recklessly he squeezed out his competitors and made the Standard Oil an octopus that controlled oil fields, pipe lines, tank cars and ship, refineries and retail outlets.

With the invention of the automobile, the gasoline which had been poured into the rivers as waste was found to be of incalculable wealth. Most of the 947,000,000 barrels of petroleum the U. S. produced in 1932 was consumed by the millions of motor cars covering the roads.

Lord Fisher, a prominent British naval chief, once prophesied that substitution of oil fuel for coal in battleships would increase fighting efficiency of all fleets by 50 per cent. Soon only obsolete vessels were stoked by coal.

The problem of what will be substituted for oil when nature's bounty gives out has been a problem. So far, artificial oils and other laboratory remedies have not proved economical.

Men Were Right; Women Eighth Of Time Pretty Selves

CHICAGO, Aug. 22 (AP)—Men have more or less suspected this all along but didn't dare say much about it.

Today, however, it became semi-official when the American Cosmetics association in convention here estimated that the average American woman spends about one-eighth of her time beautifying herself; the wealthy woman one-sixth of her time; and the actress one-fourth.

And Doris Lee Leeds, manager of a Chicago beauty shop, not a bit abashed by the time the average zonal has lost (so far unestimated) waiting while the wife or girl friend primped, had nerve enough to commend the women.

"It's necessary and essential that the business girl attend to her appearance because beauty gives her the edge in salesmanship," she said, adding it was just as important for the wealthy woman to beautify herself to safeguard her position.
