New York Fashion Parade

By MARGARET GARRAHAN

NEW YORK, June 29 (INS)—And now, my dears, we may all sit back and wait for another lot of inevitable goofs. For the designers are simply ogle-eyed over Old Italian art at the moment, and so an influx of Oriental-looking turbans a la Raphael or draped sheer caps a la Da Vinci (this particularly in view of the sari popularity) seems to be in order.

Then there's the Russian show . . . and talk is to the effect that the fall hats are going THAT way, no less . . . what with the millinery moguls having grabbed at the idea in their inspiration searching. Practically anything, we've learned, can be an inspiration.

Another influence that's having its day in the fashion picture here is the "Becky Sharp" film. Becky's clothes, to date, have been the source of a new dance frock—this a high-bodied affair of taffets with huge ruffles all around the shoulders and hemline, and dark piping outlining these and the waistline—and a new soft blue, brought out by a Fifth avenue shop and featured chiefly in sheers with either front fullness or all-around pleatings, waist-length capes and navy blue accents. This same shop, by the way, is going in much for brightly printed jackets and three-quarter coats over plain pastels—a swell idea that's popping up here and there for several months.

Right up our alley is a Madison avenue salon's newest coat dress—simply because we've always wanted a coat dress but never could find one that was neither too coat-ish nor too frock-ish. This has wide stitched bands running around the

TO JOIN POET IN "PHOBIC PRISON"

Grace Golden Professor Leonard

When William Ellery Leonard, well known poet and professor of English at the University of Wisconsin, took his third bride yesterday, Grace Golden, 33 years his junior, virtually forsook the world to join the poet in the circumscribed life of a "phobic prison" six blocks square. Professor Leonard, suffering from distance phobia, is seized with hysteria if he walks beyond a few blocks of his own apartment at Madison. Miss Golden met her husband while attending the University of Wisconsin.

William Leonard Takes Second Poet Into 'Phobic Prison' Near Wisconsin Campus

MADISON, WIS., June 29 (AP)—Snowy-haired William Ellery Leonard, poet, whose fear of distance keeps him always within a few blocks of the University of Wisconsin, where he teaches, took a young bride into his "phobic prison" today.

The 59-year-old professor was married to 27-year-old Grace Golden, graduate student, also a poet, in the seclusion of his modest campus apartment. Only a few intimate friends witnessed the ceremony.

It was Professor Leonard's third venture in marriage. His narrative of sonnets, "Two Lives," tells of the tragic suicide of his first wife. He took his second wife some 20 years ago, when he began his existence within the narrow area of one-half a square mile, from which he has since been afraid to wander. That romance ended in divorce last year.

University of Washington, former director of physical education at the University of Iowa, is the guest of Prof. and Mrs. Fred M. Pownall, 1602 N. Dubuque road. He will depart for his home tomorrow.

Dr. and Mrs. Ray Smith, 504 Oakland avenue, leave today for their summer cottage at Spirit Lake.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Kaufman, 313 S. Lucas street, and Mr. and Mrs. Glenn L. Stitzel, 310 S. Lucas street, will spend the week end in Des Moines. They will visit Mr. Kaufman's sister, Mrs. E. A. Peterson.

Reporter Explodes Old Myth About Black Widow Spiders

(Editors Note: Gene Elio had heard so much about the deadly bite of the black widow spider that he decided to do a little "medical research." With a physician nearby, Elio, 30 year old reporter for the Amarillo News-Globe, gave a spider every opportunity to bite him. But the spider didn't bite. Here's Elio's own account.)

By GENE ELIO
AMARILLO, Tex., June 29 (AP)—The "black widow" spider may be venomous but it isn't vicious. The fact one refused to bite me today adds to my contention the insect is highly overrated and maligned.

It really is a pretty little arachnid. The specimen I used in the experiment had the red and black hour-glass marking more plainly than any other I've seen.

Spins Web
She was lively and vivacious and spun a web as fine as silk over my hand as she ran to the tips of my fingers, paused and moved slowly to the palm and wrist. The pinners extending from its mouth worked continuously. Several times the spider paused and I know that I grew faint.

I expected to feel a twinge of pain and to see a red mark appear as in the case of a mosquito bite. Nothing happened.

Jabs Spider
I jabbed at it with the tip of a pencil, all but crushed it in my hand and let it do a tango with the same on my ring.

I regret that it didn't bite. While my theory that the insect is not dangerous has been absolutely substantiated, the effects of such a bite are still uncertain. My physician joined me in the belief that I would have suffered no lasting ill effects and possibly would not have been forced to go to bed.

So much talk of the spider's horrors have been passed around that I was not immune to some fear. I was aware that I might be mistaken.

Visualizes Pain
I visualized all the pains described by victims of the spider and imagined myself suffering the same agony. I found that I could imagine myself withstanding the pain.

It caused a nervous tendency but required no great amount of will power to free the bug from its glass jar whence its eight legs carried it gracefully onto the back of my hand.

Feels Creepy
A creepy feeling swept over me—spiders have always been sort of a pet horror to me. As time wore on and it still refused to take a nip, I naturally grew more confident. You will understand why I now have a more sympathetic feeling for "black widow" spiders.

I wouldn't have undertaken the test, without the assurance of a physician that I was in perfect physical condition.

I made no particular preparation for the bite through training or diet. The test had been planned as a normal procedure such as the average victim might have encountered if bitten unexpectedly. A doctor was present but was not to use any medicine until the first pain was felt.

a transcript of Arthur's testimony before the jury in which it is alleged he stated that he thought he knew Siegel, as Siegel had been pointed out to him. He denied going with Siegel and "a girl" to Siegel's place on the west side of Sioux City, and said he didn't remember any trip to Hattie Brown's place with O'Connor.

Arthur declared in his testimony he met O'Connor at Hattie Brown's and that he couldn't truthfully say that he saw Siegel with O'Connor or that he saw Siegel there at all.

Charges False Testimony
All the testimony, the indictment charges, was false and untrue and known by the defendant to be false and untrue. Attached to the indictment was the minutes of Miss Coan's testimony, which is as follows:

"My name is Lucile Coan. I live in Sioux City and am employed in the county attorney's office, and was so employed during the time Max Duckworth was acting county attorney. I am acquainted with William Arthur, Joe Siegel and Attorney General O'Connor. I went with William Arthur to the Martin hotel in the latter part of December, 1934, and had dinner and some drinks with him in the hotel.

"We then went up to Attorney General O'Connor's room and the attorney general asked Mr. Arthur if he had any liquor, and he told him he did not. Either Mr. Arthur or Attorney General O'Connor called Joe Siegel and Siegel came to Attorney General O'Connor's room in the Martin hotel, and then asked him about the liquor.

"He said he did not have any with him. We then all went together and drove from the Martin hotel on Joe Siegel's car, all in the same car, and went up to Siegel's place and we all had some drinks in Siegel's place. We then went up from there to Hattie Brown's chicken shack and we went into one of the rooms and there was present in that room Attorney General O'Connor, Joe Siegel, William Arthur and myself.

"I later saw Max Duckworth and he made some complaint to me and I left and went and got in the Duckworth car."

public interest. We appreciate the tremendous responsibility devolving upon the president and the secretary of labor to preserve economic stability and to help rehabilitate industry.

"The mine workers desire to do their part. They are not responsible for the failure of the industry to negotiate and conclude a new wage agreement. That responsibility is due to the breakdown of the price structure and the ensuing demoralization of marketing practices and the constant conflict in the ranks of the operators.

"The mine workers are the residual sufferers."

Beer Law Takes Effect

WITH THE machinery set up and the cooperation of beer dealers assured, Iowa City's strictest beer law in years will go into effect tomorrow. Provided the community backs the council and interprets the new law in the way it is intended, conditions which have had much to do with giving the city a bad reputation throughout the state should be greatly improved.

In view of the class B beer dealers' promise to the council that they will not sell near beer, perhaps the era of the "flat thumb" will gradually come to an end. The passing should be greatly hastened by the fact that neither near beer nor four cent beer cannot be drunk at roadhouses in the outlying districts.

However, the whole law will be a farce, if bootleggers continue to unload alcohol in various parts of the city. There is nothing in the new law to prevent spiking of other soft drinks besides near beer. Now that certain dance halls and amusement places are not permitted to sell beer, they will be freer of council restrictions and this may lead to more flagrant violations of existing liquor laws. Here the only hope of correcting conditions lies in the police department.

Though the law may contain some restrictions, which are going to be hard to enforce, it was enacted with the honest desire of the council to do its part in correcting unfortunate conditions locally.

Frank For President

BOTH LIBERAL and old guard republicans would do well to cast an inquiring eye in the direction of the University of Wisconsin in their search for a candidate next spring. Glenn Frank, president of that university, in his speech on the Iowa campus Friday night sounded the note that will probably be the basis of republican political philosophy in the 1936 campaign.

Frank, outstanding in educational circles for many years, has been gaining more and more recognition for his constructive criticism of the new deal among the country's conservatives. However, coming from the state of Wisconsin, Frank should be acceptable to some extent to the young republicans because of the known liberalism of that particular state. Being university president should put him in good stead to some extent with the eastern republicans. However, in view of the recent criticism of "brain trusters," perhaps a college president might be at some disadvantage in vote getting.

What the republicans will do in convention next summer is something that no politician can hope to predict. The party ought not to forget Glenn Frank, that is providing he will accept the nomination.

The following are quotations from Glenn Frank's speech in Macbride auditorium Friday night:

"Are we to strengthen democracy or surrender to dictatorship? The destiny of democracy on this continent will depend entirely upon our success or failure in solving the economic problem. If we can now move with reasonable rapidity towards a soundly based and widely distributed economic well-being, essential democracy is not likely to be seriously challenged during our generation. But whether we are to succeed or fail in solving the economic problem is still in the lap of the Gods. For all our brava whistling in the dark, we are still far from out of the woods."

"Democracy has died before in history. And peoples that had known it and prized it seemed not sorry to see it go. When popular government flickered out in ancient Greece and Rome, nobody thought of reviving it. All this may happen again on this continent in our generation. I beg you to believe that no price we may have to pay to prevent this will be too high."

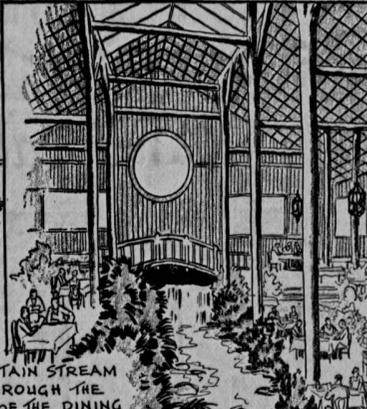

"I shall not conceal my conviction that, despite its manifest weaknesses, democracy is, in the long run, both safer than and superior to dictatorship, despite the swift of

A Washington Bystander

By KIRK SIMPSON

WASHINGTON—It fell to the lot of Madam Secretary Perkins of the labor department to function as official "new deal" murriner for the glorifiers that were NRA.

Her annual report for the fiscal year '34 was presumably on the presses when the supreme court so deflated NRA. It was written largely around the theme of NRA, viewed solely from its effect on national labor standards and influence toward evolution of a "realistic, flexible, practical" labor policy for the government. From those angles, Miss Perkins unhesitatingly pronounced the now discarded recovery act "the most comprehensive attempt to improve working conditions in competitive industry that has ever been undertaken by any nation."

A good title for the report might be a paraphrase of Mark Antony's line: "I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him." She came to praise NRA, not to bury it and to assert that its good works for labor would live on after it in national policy; but not its police powers.

Berries Help Bulgaria. SOFIA (INS)—Strawberries have become an important item in the export figures of Bulgaria. More than 5,000,000 quarts of strawberries were exported last year, mainly to Germany and Austria. It was only two years ago that Bulgaria started the export of strawberries on a large basis. Many of the berries are shipped by plane and fetch as much as $1.50 a quart.

Knocked off his bicycle by a hit-and-run motorist, he suffered concussion of the brain, possible fracture of the skull and cuts and bruises. He picked up his battered "wheel" and walked a half-mile to the police station to report the accident. He finally was prevailed upon to go to a hospital.

Stole a Sawmill. MARION, Ill. (INS)—The robber who "pulled one of the biggest jobs" in the annals of Williamson county authorities has been sentenced. He is John Clark, of this city, who stole a saw mill. Arrested with parts of the dismantled mill tied to the sides of his automobile, Clark pleaded guilty and received an indeterminate prison sentence.

Willing To Act. Is it about Haines? He won't say. He won't even tell you whether he ever met a man like Slim or a man like Red Blayde. But he will tell you that what he has written about line work was written by a real line worker. You have a feeling when you talk to him that Slim is Haines' own story, that he is not only Slim but Red Blayde also.

Sometimes, Haines says, he bets the urge to work at his old trade again. That happens when he sees other men stringing wire or building towers.

At first, he says, while working as a line man he saw nothing in it to write about. Then in Haines' mind grew the story of Slim, the story of a farm boy who saw some men building steel towers in a field and decided that this was what he wanted to do with his life, the story of Slim's friend, Red Blayde, the story of Red's girl, Callie. At nights, finally, Haines began to write. He wrote in long hand, slowly, laboriously. Much he threw away or "edited" out.

Line work was too hard to permit much writing. When you've worked all day in a snow storm stringing wire, he says, you don't feel much like sitting down at night to put words on paper. Finally Haines saved enough money so that he could stop work for awhile and write. At last "Slim" was finished. He had it typed, entered it in a prize novel contest and won second place. It was published and became a big seller.

Wanted to Write. At first, he says, while working as a line man he saw nothing in it to write about. Then in Haines' mind grew the story of Slim, the story of a farm boy who saw some men building steel towers in a field and decided that this was what he wanted to do with his life, the story of Slim's friend, Red Blayde, the story of Red's girl, Callie. At nights, finally, Haines began to write. He wrote in long hand, slowly, laboriously. Much he threw away or "edited" out.

Line work was too hard to permit much writing. When you've worked all day in a snow storm stringing wire, he says, you don't feel much like sitting down at night to put words on paper. Finally Haines saved enough money so that he could stop work for awhile and write. At last "Slim" was finished. He had it typed, entered it in a prize novel contest and won second place. It was published and became a big seller.

Screen Life

By HUBBARD KEAVY

HOLLYWOOD—There's a new book, called "Slim," which might be a story about its author. It deals with the exploits of the men who build the towers and string the wires that carry light to the people of the world.

The 26-year-old ex-lineman who wrote it is now in Hollywood to help make his story into a movie. He is William Wister Haines (not related to the former star and he's tall and slim, like the hero of his book. Haines hasn't been away from line work long. In 1934, his first novel was published and then a studio bought it and gave him a writing contract.

Haines went to the University of Pennsylvania. To pay his way, he worked during the summers as a power lineman's helper. When he was graduated—with a degree of bachelor of arts—he decided he'd rather be a full-fledged lineman than anything else. For four years he "boomed" around the country working on high lines, building towers, stringing wire, doing maintenance and construction work on electric railways. But there always was in him the urge to write.

At first, he says, while working as a lineman he saw nothing in it to write about. Then in Haines' mind grew the story of Slim, the story of a farm boy who saw some men building steel towers in a field and decided that this was what he wanted to do with his life, the story of Slim's friend, Red Blayde, the story of Red's girl, Callie. At night, finally, Haines began to write. He wrote in long hand, slowly, laboriously. Much he threw away or "edited" out.

Line work was too hard to permit much writing. When you've worked all day in a snow storm stringing wire, he says, you don't feel much like sitting down at night to put words on paper. Finally Haines saved enough money so that he could stop work for awhile and write. At last "Slim" was finished. He had it typed, entered it in a prize novel contest and won second place. It was published and became a big seller.

Willing To Act

Is it about Haines? He won't say. He won't even tell you whether he ever met a mn like Slim or a man like Red Blayde. But he will tell you that what he has written about line work was written by a real lineman. You have a feeling when you talk to him that Slim is Haines' own story, that he is not only Slim but Red Blayde also.

Sometimes, Haines says, he gets the urge to work at his old trade again. That happens when he sees other men stringing wire or building towers.

'35 Graduates Fail in Adjusting Selves to Realities, Says Frank

Education Doesn't Fit Graduate For Real Statesmanship By VIRGINIA COOK

"One college graduate after another is going out into the world and is tragically failing short of adjusting himself to the political, social and economic realities about him as persons who have not been inside college halls do," declared Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, yesterday morning in a critical and searching analysis of "The University Idea in the Life of the Times."

With a cold realism amazing to the audience of professors and students attending the university lecture and panel forum, the university president dispassionately surveyed western education and found it wanting. "It has signally failed to fit the student for realistic statesmanship in the ground plan and governance of his social and economic orders," he asserted.

Warning that there is a very great danger that we will see a bankruptcy of general liberal education in the next few years, the educator said "I am convinced that the only way we will ever produce objectively minded leadership in this country is by building a liberal arts college about the problems of controlling the political, social and economic order.

Through personal contact with some of the great scientists of the country I have become convinced that one learns to be scientific and realistic in the field that he knows. If we have students wrestling with problems of social import for a period of four years under faculty leadership we can deal more intelligently with those problems. We want to integrate not knowledge but the attack upon the problems by a federation of teachers and students starting out and saying "We must understand what the United States is passing through at the present time."

"We can not produce the type of citizens that we need by following the ancient training of scholarship with an automatic transfer from classicism to life, and I am thoroughly convinced that there is a fundamental difference between the enterprise of scholarship and that of education. There has to be a differentiation between the curriculum for scholars and for the carrying on of a liberal college education."

Deploping the overspecialization and excessive departmentalism of many modern universities, Frank outlined a liberal education that would be objectively fearless in facing economic and social realities. He said the experimental college at the University of Wisconsin had suggested it was possible to eliminate excessive departmentalism, informalize the teacher-professor relationship and establish a community feeling through dormitories.

Declaring that the three safeguards of university freedom are the unbreakable course of the true scholar, the willingness of university administrators to surrender everything else before they submit their academic freedom, and the tradition of freedom of tenure for university professors, Frank said that the day a state university sells its soul to any party or creed it may as well close its doors.

Search of Truth "Academic freedom is freedom to devote one's life to search of truth; it is not freedom for the teacher to turn propagandist and then hide behind the skirts of the university. The university must not become a sterilized neutrality holding aesthetically aloof from the sweat of everyday toil. It must not enjoy freedom simply because it is dead, idea-less; a rehash of yesterday's knowledge that no one cares about."

Discussing the social lag Frank said that during the last five years it has filtered down to growing millions that the revolutionary results of physical science and industrial technology have brought our traditional order of life and enterprise to a historic turn in the road. "The gravest threat in the offing

Percy Sittingbull Tells of New Manners, Customs of Indians

"Indian manners and customs have been changing rapidly during the last 10 years, since more and more Indians have become better educated, and now they have fully adopted the manners and customs of the white man," declared Percy Sittingbull, half Sioux, half Arapaho Indian, in an interview with William Brown, WSUI announcer Friday night.

He is a newcomer at the University of Iowa and hails from the largest Indian reservation in the world, the Navajo reservation of 40,000 Indians in New Mexico and Arizona.

Likes Guns Has More Than Fifty of Historic Value

Virgil V. Edmonds, G of Kansas City, Mo., will soon have his doctor's degree, but he is looking forward almost as eagerly to enlarging his collection of guns and firearms dealing with many famous and infamous characters of the old southwest. Mr. Edmonds has been collecting these guns for many years and his total is now over fifty guns with various histories connected with them.

His most famous exhibit is a double action navy 44 made in 1869 by the Colt company, the first of its kind. Mr. Edmonds acquired this gun from a member of the board of education where he teaches during the winter. The gun originally belonged to Larry Fisher, a notorious Texas bandit who was killed in a skirmish with police officers. Whether this Larry Fisher is the same person frequently referred to as Larry Kingfisher by the author, Zane Grey, in many of his western novels, Mr. Edmonds is not sure, but he has grounds for believing this to be true.

Lego! ROCHESTER, Mass. (INS)—While he was kneeling beside a bin in a shoe factory here, a rat ran up A. L. Hamilton's trousers as far as his knee. Hamilton's leg was bitten when he attempted to crush the rat, and another workman who slashed at Hamilton's leg was also bitten. The rat escaped and Hamilton was taken to a doctor.

Eight Notches The gun is a long black looking affair with a loose pearl handle and an extremely long barrel. The handle is decorated with eight notches which, Mr. Edmonds explained, stood for eight men killed by the outlaw exclusive of Negroes and Mexicans. The holster is made of dark brown leather with a raised design completely encircling it. It is an exact duplicate of the original holster with the exception of the top and bottom. Fisher had cut a hole in the bottom and had cut off the top several inches to enable him to shoot the gun without drawing it from the holster. This was not very accurate, but in a target as large as a man absolute accuracy was not essential. The barrel and handle of the gun are very worn where they came into contact with the saddle and holster. The gun is in excellent shape and is as accurate as many of the modern firearms made today.

Other Rare Exhibits Among the other rare exhibits in Mr. Edmonds' collection is a small pearl handled colt 25. This gun was taken off a card gambler on a boat plying up and down the Mississippi

Lon Warneke, French Hurl Double Victory

Bruins Stop Bucs In First Game, 1-0; Win Second, 2-1

CHICAGO, June 29 (AP)— The Cubs climbed from fourth to second place in the National League standings today when they edged out Pittsburgh in a pair of defensive duels, 1 to 0 in 12 innings and 2 to 1, before 17,400. Cuck Klein's 11th homer was the margin between Lon Warneke and Red Lucas in the second game, after Walter Hoyt's own throwing error cost him an overtime decision to Larry French in the opener.

CHICAGO, June 29 (AP)— Lon Warneke pitched a perfect game for the Cubs in their 1-0 victory over the Boston Braves in the first game of the doubleheader at Wrigley field.

Warneke, who has pitched 10 perfect games in his career, was in command from the first inning to the last. He struck out 10 batters and walked only one.

French pitched a complete game in the second game, leading the Cubs to a 2-1 victory. He struck out 10 batters and walked only one.

French's victory was aided by a pair of errors by the Braves. One was committed by catcher Red Lucas in the eighth inning.

Walter Hoyt pitched the first game for the Braves. He was out of luck from the start, allowing Lon Warneke to pitch a perfect game.

Hoyt's error in the eighth inning proved costly for the Braves. It allowed French to score the winning run.

French's performance was his best since joining the Cubs. He has a record of 10-10 on the season.

The Cubs' victory moved them up to second place in the National League standings. They are now only one game behind the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Warneke's performance was a career highlight. It was his 11th perfect game in 17 major league appearances.

STORMY LOVE

A YOUNG NAVY MAN'S ROMANCE BELLE BURNS GROMER

Why didn't you tell me she was like this?"

CHAPTER 18
WHEN JAN caught sight of Val he heard her voice faintly, saw the color drain from her face; her gaze and his seemed to lock and build a bridge of dazzling light between them. A breathless second—and then she had picked up words and air again. And though he was aware of the curious stares of those about him, yet he scarcely waited for the applause that followed her song before he pressed forward to where Jan met the two eager hands he held out to her.

"Gloria, but it's good to see you, honey!" Keeping tight hold of her slim fingers, he leaned above her, his blue eyes smiling down into hers. Jan's cheeks were delicately flushed now. "Val, I had no idea you were arriving until the transport on the twenty-third," she gave an excited little laugh. "Truly, I thought I was seeing a nice brown ghost."

"I've had a surprise myself. Sue said you were at Mt. Rainier."

"We were, but Kent sprained his wrist skiing. Then last night the rain spoiled the snow. And so we all decided to come home."

Val's smile faded. "Townley, eh? I suppose that bird is still conspiring against your single blessedness, Jan?"

A frown straightened her arched brows. "Did you have a pleasant crossing?" she asked with sudden cool politeness. "On her way through the room, interrupted. Sleepy eyes mocked them when she cooed, "Hello there, Jan darling. Seeing you two blissfully glaring at each other reminds me of Old Home week. Expect don't forget that how there is a dear little stranger to complicate matters." She laughed and moved on.

The color in Jan's cheeks deepened. "Val, what a stupid idiot I am," she cried. "I was so—so startled, seeing you—Oh, I should have told you at once how delighted everyone was at the news of your marriage. Do forgive me—I'm afraid I simply forgot for a moment."

"Good Lord, he'd forgotten, himself," she muttered. "He's taken on a pilot," he said gravely. "She is a—darling and I'm hoping you will be friends. In fact, I'm counting on you, Jan. Lia is such a kid and she is new to the navy, you know."

"Lia. It's a lovely name. I'll do everything I can to make her feel at home here. You know that." The old pilot Jan was in command now. Oddly regretful, he surrendered the thrill of that first excited moment. He watched her step back a pace to regard him. "Let me look at you," she said, her head tipped to one side. "And tell me all about your self."

Simpson Will Manage Iowa City State Employment Office

Eastridge Will Remain Here As Interviewer

Iowa City Office To Serve as Sub-Office Under Cedar Rapids

William H. Simpson, present district manager of the National Reemployment office, will continue as district manager under the new state employment set-up with offices at Iowa City. It was announced here yesterday by employment officials.

James L. Eastridge will continue as senior interviewer at the Iowa City office until at least July 1, Mr. Simpson said last night. Other workers for the local office have not been announced yet.

Sub-Office

The Iowa City state employment office will be a sub office of the Cedar Rapids district office.

All statistics which have been cleared through the Iowa City National Reemployment office will now be cleared at Cedar Rapids under the state service, Mr. Simpson explained.

Use Old Quarters

The old national service headquarters in the post office building will be used by the Iowa State Employment service here with additional room provided by the post office department.

The office will be partitioned so there will be a manager's office and a woman's division of the service. The city council has appropriated $135 for office expenses, telephone service, and other incidentals for the new state office.

The Wagner-Peyser bill provided that the National Reemployment service should be absorbed by state offices in each of the 48 states.

Mr. Simpson will go to Des Moines tomorrow to confer with officials there concerning the new state set-up.
