South Carolina And California Take Spotlight

Expected to Furnish Another Test Of New Deal Support

Democratic primary elections in South Carolina and California will measure today the effectiveness of President Roosevelt's campaign to elect new dealers to congress.

In each of two sizzling contests for places in the senate, the chief executive has made his preference clear. Without naming names, but unmistakably, he has asked that democrats of South Carolina defeat Sen. Ellison D. Smith, opponent of some administration measures. And he has endorsed Sen. William G. McAdoo of California for reelection.

Smith, a senate veteran who holds a key position as chairman of the agriculture committee, is opposed by Gov. Olin D. Johnston, who has proclaimed himself a "100 per cent" new dealer. Smith has said he voted for 80 per cent of administration measures and would continue to back such legislation except when the "best interests of South Carolina" required a contrary course.

Entering the contest after a third candidate, Edgar A. Brown, had withdrawn, Mr. Roosevelt said of Smith and Johnston: "One of these candidates thinks in terms of the past and governs his actions accordingly. The other thinks in terms of 1938, 1948 and 1958 as well."

Students of politics awaited the South Carolina results as an indication of how successfully Mr. Roosevelt's party "purge" is going.

Roosevelt Goes to Work

'Prince John' Punches His First Time Clock; Arrives an Hour Early

BOSTON, Aug. 29 (AP)—Exactly an hour early and "really serious" about the whole thing, John Roosevelt punched his first time-clock today and began earning $18.50 a week in the basement of a Boston department store.

The president's youngest son, who wouldn't wake his bride of two months when he left for work because it was too early, showed up at the employe entrance at 7:20 a.m. (CST) and was sent immediately to the basement. He was dressed in a gray suit, blue shirt and blue tie—and he was hatless.

"I'm really serious about this job," said John, on his way to the store. "I think I'm going to like store work and I want to get ahead in the business, like any young fellow beginning at the bottom."

The sooner everybody forgets I'm father's son, the better it will be for me.

John's exact job hasn't been determined, but he was assigned to the stock room, apparently to become familiar with merchandising lists. However, advertising is his chief interest.

"Gosh," he said, "I hope they don't send me around with a truck, filling up ladies' garment counters."

Major Alexander Seversky Sets New Transcontinental Air Mark By Spanning U. S. in 10 Hours

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 29 (AP)—A new transcontinental speed record for airplanes was set today when Major Alexander P. De Seversky flew here from New York in 10 hours, 3 minutes, 7 seconds.

This is 1 hour, 26 minutes, 53 seconds better than the east-west record held for years by Col. Roscoe Turner.

On the west-east route, which nearly always offers better flying conditions, the record is 7 hours, 29 minutes, set by Howard Hughes, multi-millionaire around-the-world flier.

Major Seversky, airplane builder, made only one stop, at Kansas City, in the 1200-horsepower Seversky monoplane which he delivered here to Jacqueline Cochrane, noted aviatrix. She will fly it next Saturday in the annual Bendix trophy dash, feature of the national air races held again this year at Cleveland.

After gliding down to a perfect landing, Major Seversky told reporters he believed he had achieved a speed of more than 300 miles along some portions of his journey.

"My altitude ranged from 6,000 to 16,000 feet," he said. "I was testing the plane under varying conditions—and I know what it will do in that Bendix race. I didn't have to press it today."

Major Seversky took off from Floyd Bennett field, New York, at 3:37 a.m. Pacific Standard Time and landed at Union Air terminal at 1:40:7 p.m.

He stopped for half an hour at Kansas City, refueling with 350 gallons of gasoline. He said he had encountered headwinds all the way from New York to Kansas City.

Foreign Office Warns of 'Acute Crisis'

Hitler Surveys Fortifications Along 'Front'

BERLIN, Aug. 29 (AP)—The German foreign office mouthpiece warned tonight "a latent crisis is threatening to become acute," as Chancellor Adolf Hitler made a whirlwind tour of Reich fortifications along the French border.

Diplomatsche Politische Korrespondenz complained that nothing concrete yet had been done by Czechoslovakia to give Sudeten Germans their rights as it warned of the crisis.

"The Czechs have been handing out programs and assurances for the past 20 years but all they had in common was to confirm them in the power to lord it over other nationality groups," the organ said.

It added that a "crisis isn't involved by one great power creating the Czechoslovak government with the best intentions just because it proposed to the Sudetens a new plan concerning which nothing is known."

The paper then went on to urge that "representations concerning the crisis should be direct to those in power to mend matters radically and without delay so they shall not be left under the impression that they have done enough and that anyway they are safe by being backed by great powers."

"Until now Praha has persisted in the delusion that Czechs in the border regions are and should be lords of the country and that they can behave as such, instead of as what they are—a typical minority," the foreign office mouthpiece concluded.

The Fuehrer's inspection trip was expected to take him from Aachen, near Belgium, to the vicinity of Basel, Switzerland. He touched at Kehl, opposite Strasbourg, France, today.

U.S. Navy Reported Planning to Continue Present Fast Warship Building Struggle

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29 (AP)—The navy, anxious to continue the present fast pace of warships building, has begun preparation of a 1939-40 program which, officials indicate, will comprise at least 18 fighting ships.

The program will be submitted to the next session of congress, beginning in January.

It calls tentatively for two battleships, two cruisers, eight destroyers, six submarines, and possibly one new aircraft carrier.

Officials emphasized that the program was still in the discussion stage and that definite recommendations had not been decided upon.

An increase in navy personnel also is under discussion, but the figure has not been agreed upon. Unofficial estimates place it at from 2,000 to 5,000.

The 1938-39 appropriation called for two battleships, two cruisers, eight destroyers and six submarines. It was augmented subsequently by the deficiency bill providing for two more battleships, two cruisers and a variety of auxiliary ships.

An indication that the army as well as the navy would have an ambitious program ready for the next congress has come from Secretary of War Woodring.

Writing in the army and navy journal's 75th anniversary number, Woodring said "much remains to be done before we can consider our army thoroughly modernized."

Senator Wagner Carries Complaints Of A.F. of L. on His Visit to President

Some cases involving American Federation of Labor interests.

Pre-Session Disputes Point Toward a Stormy Session

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29 (AP)—Four months before congress convenes, the big battle of the coming session is rapidly developing.

President Roosevelt has said that the Wagner National Labor Relations act needs amending. Opening that law to revision obviously means a three-way struggle which could easily prove the most bitter since the president's court reorganization bill was defeated.

Even this far in advance, there is no doubt that the contest will find:

The bulk of industry, in one camp, demanding greater protection for the employers and restrictions upon union activities.

The American federation of labor, in a second, insisting upon strong and specific safeguards for the collective bargaining rights of its craft unions, rivals of the industry-wide unions of the Committee for Industrial Organization.

And in the third camp, unquestionably, will be John L. Lewis and his CIO, vigorously and vehemently opposing any changes in the law first of all, but ready, if revision is attempted, to present and urge their own amendments, based largely upon the record of Senator LaFollette's investigation of anti-union tactics which the Wagner act has not prevented.

It seems clear that a fourth party to the controversy, the National Labor Relations board, target of the denunciations of industrial leaders and the federation alike, will oppose amendments also. Its members are taking no part in the controversy, but privately they make no secret of the fact that they consider revision unnecessary.

This already complex situation is made the more complicated, for the time being at least, by the fact that a presidential commission is about to report on the operation of the British labor laws, which numerous industrialists have held up as a model for American legislation. The A. F. of L. was represented on the commission. The CIO refused to have anything to do with it, frankly suspicious that the study was ordered with amendments to the Wagner act in mind.

Apparently the fight over amending the act is to be preceded by a preliminary skirmish, which may produce an important test of strength. A few days after Mr. Roosevelt gave William Green, president of the federation, the word that revision would be undertaken, the president reappointed Donald Wakefield Smith to the labor board. Green's criticism of the board had been matched for its vigor and emphasis by his criticism of Smith individually. The A. F. of L. may be expected to oppose senate confirmation of the nomination, along with numerous business interests ready to take the federation side of that issue.

The law itself was enacted to prevent employers from discouraging membership in unions. It says that the workers have a right to self organization and collective bargaining. Any employer who abridges that right by interference, restraint or coercion is guilty, under the act, of an "unfair labor practice."

Wagner emerged from the conference with little to say except that he had been invited to the quarterly meeting of the council to hear "what they regard as complaints about the disposition of

AFRAID TO MARRY

HELEN WELSHIMER

CHAPTER 2
She heard a long whistle over the telephone. "Listen, Judy Rogers, we dine at cafeterias, marble-topped restaurants, places you've never been. Lunch with me means Childs."

If she hadn't been so upset, Judy might have laughed. But she had been hurt cruelly a moment before, so she said: "You're trying to tell me, I suppose, that I should get started on the automats—now that I'm poor!"

"You're a mind reader. I always liked bright young women. Well, is it Childs' or not?" "I want to hear the facts in the case, and if I have to depend on you for them, I suppose it's Childs'." Judy answered the question of the young attorney who had said:

"Is it Childs' or not?" "Good! The corned beef hash is excellent and there are those who have great fondness for their chicken croquettes with mashed potatoes."

"And hot butter cakes. I like them." "Then you have been there!" He sounded almost glad. "Sometimes for breakfast, after a party. I know their eggs, too."

It was foolish talk, something with which to pass away a few of the moments that stretched in a shadowy strain forever since Craig was gone. Craig—the name turned in her heart like something burning, quivering, beating, pulsing.

Because she wanted to cry, Judy's voice was not laughing now, but thin and cool, the huskiness quite gone, as she promised to meet Ronald Birrell at his offices at 1.

She would not have minded a subway, as a means of transportation to the office, on any other morning. But today the thought of the tall young man who was hurrying to meet his bride made her legs weak, her stomach hurt, her head ache.

She called the butler, asked him to have the town car ready and sat in one corner of the chauffeur threaded his way downtown. She smiled crookedly as she dismissed him. This probably was her last ride in the car. All servants would be leaving within a few days. But that did not matter. The fortune wasn't important. But Craig...

"If I only had not been so frightened at marriage, of love ending, he would never have married this other girl. He loved me, he loved me, he loved me!" The words went singing through her heart. Then a sharp contradiction almost interrupted: "But did he? Wasn't it habit? Maybe love doesn't last. You knew it didn't—that's why you refused him before—why he so refused when your theories prove true?"

It was such a hopeless problem that she finally pushed it away. She tried to think of young Ronald Birrell as she went up in the elevator to the well-known law offices where she had gone so many times, in former days, to pick up a check, or ask a favor when her father was abroad.

Miss Martin greeted her. Idly Judy noticed her blue eyes, her bands of honey-colored hair. Pretty. And a little contemptuous of the fallen debutante.

"Mr. Birrell is waiting for you," she said, and led Judy down the deeply-carpeted hall to a half open door.

Judy stepped inside. A tall young man, with wide shoulders, was standing at a window, his back turned to her. His hair was red—such a rebellious, rough, vibrant red that she checked an impulse to laugh. So this was Ronald Birrell, the mountain boy from Tennessee, who had made such a name for himself during his two years of practice in a southern city that the famous law firm had offered him a place on its staff. In that moment before he saw her, she remembered other things about him. He had been a football star, an All-American in fact, at Princeton. Then he had gone back home to begin the career which he was continuing in New York.

He turned. His eyes were gray and friendly. His face was lean and tanned. The hand that he extended was strong and forceful. "Judy Rogers," he said, more than asked. "I'm glad you came."

"You didn't think I would?" "I didn't know. I'm glad you decided my way."

"So am I." Judy smiled. Dimples flashed in her cheeks, the brown eyes quivered with small golden lights. The young man glanced at her quizzically. She flushed a little. Silly! Hadn't young men glanced at her that way often?

Across the room she glimpsed herself in a mirror. The yellow frock with its wide brown belt and brief brown jacket was stunning enough. So were the accessories, carefully assembled. She noted that Ronald Birrell's suit was a good tweed, in excellent taste. She wondered why she had expected that it wouldn't be.

He took her into a quiet restaurant near the office. "But this wasn't in your promise," Judy exclaimed.

"I decided we needed a corner where we could talk. We've a lot to say to each other. First, let's order."

"You have a lot to say to me," Judy corrected. "I'd like tomato juice, an omelette and dry toast."

He shook his head. "No go. For the ordeals ahead of you, young lady, you should have a beef stew, with lots of vegetables. But—well, this time you may have the omelette."

This time... It was sheer idocy to be glad he had said the two words which projected their acquaintanceship into the future, she told herself. She was, though. Being an honest person, she admitted the fact.

He leaned back in his chair. "We could have made it the Ritz, or the St. Regis, or Twenty-One—but on my expense account, either—but I thought you should grow accustomed to the lesser eating places."

"Thoughtful of you, Mr. Birrell. Know any nice lunch counters?" "Dozens of them. I'll initiate you."

"Thanks. But I won't be here." "Going away?"

She wondered if the concern in his eyes could be real. "In a day or two. My father and stepmother are busy, and I'm in the way. My mother's in France, and it's time to join her, anyway. She'll be cabling me a ticket and—" she shrugged. No reason to tell this straight-forward young man that she wanted the width of the ocean between her and a tall boy, with light hair and blue eyes, who had married another girl last night.

"Running away, eh?" "Yes." "Let him think what he would." "Call it that, if you wish."

"You look brave—and sturdy." "I can't face it just yet," she said, and referred to something about which he knew nothing at all.

"I might have known," he murmured. "Hot house plants can't. I hoped you were different."

"Why?" "I made up my mind to like you, when I first joined the firm. You were not approachable then. Now you are. And you turn out to be a disappointment."

"Anyway, now that you know, you can recover."

"I think you're worth saving." "Nice of you."

"Not at all. You're most attractive—don't blush, it isn't news to you—you have an excellent mind, no doubt, if you polished it up, and you have a chance to make good. In what are you interested?"

"I like to design clothes," she heard her voice answering. "I always thought, if I had to earn my own living, I'd try to get in a shop or studio." It was strange that she should tell this to the boy across the table.

"Good! Then we must find you an opening."

"No, you must not find me an opening. I'm going away. To Paris, a city in a country across an ocean."

"Oh, yes, Paris. We'll skip that. You can go when you're famous. Maybe have a showing over there."

"I'm going now. Tomorrow. Day after. Whenever a boat sails."

It was an absurd thing to quarrel with a young man whom she had just met. It was ridiculous to grow upset over his criticism. These things Judy told herself. But she heard her voice answering more and more defiantly. At last, she said:

"Why should I care what you think?" "Maybe you shouldn't—but you do," he answered, and smiled at her so merrily that she laughed.

Then he sobered: "You may do as you please, Judy Rogers. I was mistaken about you. Now we'll talk about the business matters for which you came. Then you catch your boat, and I'll see you in the rotogravures now and then."

Judy leaned across the narrow table, cheeks blazing with furious color.

Steindlers Fete Ramona Beck At Pre-Nuptials

Miss Beck to Marry Dr. J. Vernon Luck At Danville Saturday

Ramona Beck of Burlington was honored last night at a miscellaneous shower and party in the home of Mrs. Arthur Steindler, 103 Melrose avenue. Assisting Mrs. Steindler were Mrs. T. L. Waring and Mrs. Carl Roulin.

Miss Beck, whose marriage to Dr. J. Vernon Luck of Iowa City will be solemnized Saturday in her home in Danville, was the recipient of many gifts. The gift packages which were gathered under a blue ruffled umbrella were distributed from a table decorated in pink and white.

Salmon gladioli and white lilies decorated the basement recreation room, where the guests played bridge and other games.

Mrs. David Armbruster and Mrs. Fred Pownall presided at the refreshment table. The floral centerpiece was of white lilies, and pink and green furnished the decorative motif in the dining room.

Thirty guests shared the pre-nuptial courtesies.

Out-of-town guests were Mrs. Ray Mix, Sabeth Mix and Mrs. George Beck, all of Danville.

First honors in bridge were won by Mrs. Harold Unger. Mrs. F. D. Francis won second honors, and Mrs. Beck won first honors in Chinese checkers.

Annual Induction Ceremony Will Open New Year

The induction ceremony, which has grown to be a tradition at the University of Iowa since President-emeritus Walter A. Jessup started it in 1923, will officially open the university's new year Sept. 26.

For 15 minutes before the beginning of the initial classes of the first semester, students and staff members will gather on the slope west of Old Capitol for the ceremony.

A brief address by President Eugene A. Gilmore will be climaxed by the administering of the oath of fealty. Although there is no compulsion about attendance, it is customary for everyone connected with the university, from deans down to janitors' assistants, to attend.

HOSTESS HINTS

"Garden menus" are in vogue during this season of the year. Vegetables are economical and in their prime on the market and should be featured on the daily menu.

Ripe tomatoes, fresh from the vine, stuffed with creamed tuna fish and garnished with grated cheese, is a nourishing and attractive main dish suitable for a luncheon or dinner.

From an economy standpoint it is a wise choice for it not only furnishes protein with its milk, cheese and fish but also is a rich source of minerals and vitamins.

It will be a favorite for a hot luncheon dish for it is easily prepared and adds a festive touch to the luncheon plate. The bright red of the tomato filled with creamy tuna fish mixture and topped with golden toasted cheese makes a brilliant background for simple accompaniments.

Other fish or left-over meat may be substituted for the tuna fish if desired. Left-over chicken added to the creamy white sauce is particularly tasty. Whatever the combination, it will be a favorite for the juiciness of the tart tomato and the celery for seasoning adds piquancy to the more bland filling.

If the stuffed tomatoes are to be the main dish for a meal, choose large, firm, ripe tomatoes. If other vegetables are to accompany them choose smaller tomatoes for stuffing. Here are the simple directions:

- 6 large tomatoes
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 2 1/2 tablespoons butter
- 1-4 cup finely chopped celery
- 1 cup milk
- 1/2 teaspoon celery salt
- 2 1/2 tablespoons flour
- 3 teaspoons capers (optional)
- 13-oz. can of tuna fish
- 6 tablespoons grated cheese

Wash tomatoes, scoop out about one-half of the inside of the tomato from stem end. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Drain, and flake the tuna. Melt the butter, add celery and simmer until celery is soft. Add flour, blend well. Stir in milk slowly. Cook over direct flame, stirring constantly until thick and smooth. Add celery salt and tuna. Place the tomatoes in a hot oven, 450 degrees F. for five minutes, remove and heap the hot tuna mixture in the center. Sprinkle cheese on top, and return to oven to let cheese melt and brown. Serve at once, garnished with parsley and cucumber. Serves 6.

Wallace Robinson ... whisker printing

Something new in the way of advertising was devised by Wallace Robinson of Woodward, Okla., a printer at heart but a rodeo fan on the surface. Advertising the annual rodeo held at Woodward, Robinson had a job of "whisker printing" done by the barber who wielded his razor like a sign painter would his brush.

Movers September 1st Finds Many Changes

September 1 and moving day will be almost synonymous terms to many Iowa Citizens, for Thursday will find several local families changing their place of residence.

Among the "movers" are Mr. and Mrs. Karl Ketelsen, 340 Ellis avenue, who will locate in the house at 921 S. Summit street. The Earl Snyder's, who have been living there, have rented one of the new apartments at Woolf avenue court.

It'll just be a change of the numbers in the street address of Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Huyett, who will make their new home at 412 S. Summit street. They formerly lived at 111 S. Summit street.

New residents in Iowa City are Mrs. Willie Reid and her two sons. Formerly of Rosehill, they will reside at 922 E. Washington street.

New residents in the house which Mr. and Mrs. George F. Trotter, 215 Sunset University heights, are now occupying will be Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Hamburg. The Trotters will take up their residence at 610 Oakland avenue.

Moving into the new Nall apartments are Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wade. Mr. and Mrs. Wade have been making their home at 480 Grand avenue.

Making their new home at 1218 Friendly avenue will be Mr. and Mrs. Wendell Smith. They formerly lived at 742 Rundell avenue.

Not Too Far Ahead

Class Organizers Will Have Plenty to Do In Next Few Months

Nine months ahead is not too early for alumni organizers to start planning class reunions for June, 1939, especially since members must be rallied from all sections of the nation.

The position of class organizer has been accepted by 17 graduates, Prof. Bruce E. Mahan, alumni secretary, reported yesterday.

They range from members of the college classes of 1884, which will observe their 50th anniversary of graduation, to the comparative youngsters of 1929.

Two of the oldest organizers now listed are L. S. Kemington of Newton, liberal arts of 1894, and Judge M. F. Edwards of Parkersburg, member of the law class of 1884.

At the alumni day ceremonies of June 3, 1939, when members of classes with numerals ending in four and nine hold reunions, there will be competition for the travelling cup which goes annually to the class having the largest percentage of its living members present.

Theater Managers Meet This Morning In Hotel Jefferson

At 10 o'clock this morning a conference of theater managers from seven Iowa cities will meet at the Jefferson hotel to discuss the possibilities of conducting a movie quiz contest to be held in their theaters.

Leading the discussion will be the general manager of the Central States Theater corporation, Harry Warren of Des Moines. The cities represented are Iowa City, Albia, Grinnell, Centerville, Chariton, Burlington and Clinton.

U-Go, I-Go Club Will Meet Tonight With Mrs. West
