BRANDEIS RETIRES FROM COURT

Will Entomb Pope In St. Peter's Cathedral

Pilgrims View Pontifical Bier Despite Rain

Services Will Be Broadcast in U. S. At 9:15 a.m. C. S. T.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13 (AP)—Burial services for Pope Pius XI are to be rebroadcast in this country by all networks Tuesday morning. The transmission, originating by short wave from HVJ at Vatican City, has been scheduled to start on WEAJ-WJZ-NEC, WABC-CBS, WOR-MBS and WMCA-Intercity at 9:15 and continue to 10 a.m. Time is Central Standard.

VATICAN CITY, Feb. 13 (AP)—Ancient grottoes under St. Peter's cathedral were made ready tonight to receive the body of Pope Pius XI in a triple coffin. Thousands on thousands of faithful passed reverently before the pontiff's bier in the vast cathedral while workmen cleared an underground space for the burial tomorrow evening. The stream of humanity that came in the rain to venerate the pope was smaller than yesterday's great throng. But worshippers shuffled through the basilica throughout the day. The scene at the Vatican constituted the largest public manifestations of respect ever shown a dead pope in the cathedral, partly because Rome has nearly doubled in population since Benedict XV died in 1922.

Estimated of the number of persons who had passed the bier first in the Sistine chapel and, starting yesterday, in St. Peter's, ranged from nearly 500,000 upward. L'Osservatore Romano, Vatican City newspaper, placed the number of worshippers at 1,000,000. Other estimates, however, cut this figure in half, including 200,000 persons yesterday and 108,000 today.

Trainloads of pilgrims came from Italian cities and from outside the country. Milan, where Pius XI as Achille Cardinal Ratti was archbishop before he became pope, sent many pilgrims. A large delegation came from Hungary. The burial ceremony tomorrow will be broadcast to the world by radio, but the public will be excluded, only cardinals and other prelates, the papal court, the diplomatic corps, Roman patriots and other invited dignitaries will see the ceremony.

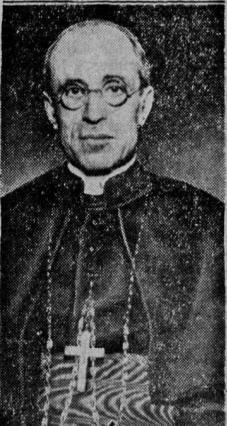

The body will be placed in coffins of zinc-lined cypress, lead and elm in the apse before the altar of the chair where funeral masses are sung for the late pontiff daily, instead of in the choir chapel, as were his predecessors. It was expected that the cathedral would be opened to the public tomorrow from 8 a.m. until 1 p.m. prior to the burial ceremony. The ceremony will begin at 4 p.m. (9 a.m. C.S.T.).

Know Your University—

The premier showing of the first University of Iowa newsreel will be tomorrow night at 7:30 in Macbride auditorium. A technicolor film, the newsreel will be supplemented with a showing of the feature, "A Summer Session at Iowa."

Free tickets for this "Know Your University" event, sponsored by the extension division and The Daily Iowan, will be available to both town and gown this morning at The Daily Iowan business office, the information desk of Iowa Union, and at the offices in Quadrangle, Hillcrest, Currier Hall, Eastlawn, Westlawn and Law Commons.

Heads 'Open Seat'

Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli is head of the "open seat" which exercises the powers of church sovereignty between the death of the Pope and the coronation of his successor.

Next Pope?

His eminence, Ildelfonso Cardinal Schuster, archbishop of Milan, has been mentioned as a likely successor to the head of the Catholic church. Cardinal Schuster, 59 years old, was created cardinal in 1929.

Germany, U.S. May Barter

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13 (AP)—Germany was reported tonight to be offering farm machinery, poultry netting and barbed wire in exchange for wheat and lard in extensive barter deals with midwestern farmers and packers' cooperative organizations.

That barter negotiations are being carried on was confirmed by German sources here and by informed quarters in Berlin. Dr. Wilhelm Tannenber, first secretary of the German embassy here, and Dr. Horst Fricke, German commercial attaché in Chicago, were said to be representing the reich in the negotiations.

Representative Tom Martin Says Imagination 'Is All That New Dealers Have Not Taxed'

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 13 (AP)—Representative Thomas E. Martin (R-Ia.), said tonight the estimated 1940 debt of $44,457,000 would make, "in dollar bills sewed together, a blanket more than 300 feet wide and long enough to extend from Washington to Los Angeles."

"If that description of our national debt taxes your imagination," he asserted in an address prepared for delivery to the 41st annual Lincoln day dinner of the Albany county republican committee, "I ask your kind indulgence in view of the fact that your imagination is just about all you have left that the new dealers have not taxed."

NORWAY'S GIFT

Luther College to Get Art Objects

DECORAH, Feb. 13 (AP)—Dr. O. J. H. Preus, president of Luther college here, announced today that Crown Prince Olav of Norway will deliver personally to the Norwegian American historical museum here a collection of objects representing old Norwegian culture and arts. The presentation will take place when the crown prince and Crown Princess Martha visit Decorah on May 6 and 7, Dr. Preus said, and will be one of the main features of the reception program now being planned for the royal couple. The museum of industrial arts at Oslo, Norway, informed Dr. Preus of the gift.

Hoover Tells Of GOP Goals

Addresses Republican Leaders at New York Lincoln Day Dinner

By The Associated Press
Former President Herbert Hoover, declaring that the republican party had been rejuvenated, called on it last night to return "sanity, common sense and constructive action" to government. The only living former president was the key-note speaker at an assembly of party notables in a New York City hotel, one of a series of nation-wide dinners honoring the memory of Abraham Lincoln, first president elected under the republican banner.

In his prepared address, Mr. Hoover said the missions of the party were "the preservation of the principles of dignity and personality of individual men and women... truth, justice, tolerance and mercy; economic restoration and insuring peace for America."

But amidst the jubilation over last fall's election successes, and the confident prediction of victory in 1940, there was also a warning from a party elder that the G. O. P. must undergo a rebirth.

In Los Angeles, William Allen White, veteran Emporia (Kan.) editor, told republicans that "the grand old republican party today stands either upon the brink of rebirth or the rim of the grave."

Mincing no words, White said the party must recognize a changed status of labor and new issues of the day.

"In this new world, a world of social, economic, political and spiritual change, it is silly to insist that we stand where we always have stood," he said. "If we keep on standing where we stood 15 or 20 years ago, we are going to be knocked into the middle of next week."

Bill Merging Library, History Functions Signed

DES MOINES, Feb. 13 (AP)—Gov. George A. Wilson today signed the first of the major Iowa state government consolidation bills, a measure merging the various state library functions and the historical department. Sponsors have estimated the bill would save approximately $20,000 a year in administrative expense.

Bill Merging Library, History Functions Signed

"The farmers of Iowa," he continued, "are thoroughly acquainted with the problems of debt and they realize keenly that debt can impair not only efficiency but the harmonious peace and security of the individual, the community, the state and the nation."

Senators Okay New Welfare Board Set-Up

Reorganization Bill Carries 35 to 10 Despite Opposition

DES MOINES, Feb. 13 (AP)—Overcoming tenacious opposition, the Iowa senate tonight passed and sent back to the house a measure creating a three-member board of social welfare to undertake the management of old age assistance, child welfare and aid to the blind.

The upper chamber voted 35 to 10 in adopting the program advocated by republican consolidationists.

An amendment, described by Rep. Dean W. Peisen (R) of Eldora, as "entirely friendly," requires reconsideration by the house probably the first thing Tuesday. Peisen, house "father" of the consolidation bills, said he would recommend adoption of the amendment by that body.

The welfare bill, opposed by professional welfare workers who believed a paid administrator should be placed in charge, provides that one of the three members of the board shall be a woman. The members would receive $4,000 a year each. It would supplant the present five-member part-time board which receives $10 a day when in session, with a $1,200 yearly ceiling on remuneration per member.

Terms of the five present members expire at midnight tonight.

Final approval of the welfare board bill in the senate climaxed a hectic day for that chamber. Republican members were aligned with democrats both for and against the bill with opposition centered on a proposal by Sen. George M. Paul (R) of Des Moines, to continue with a five-member part-time board under a paid administrator.

Paul, aided by Senator Ross Mowry (R) of Newton; Senator E. K. Belkman (R) of Ottumwa, and others, fought vainly to substitute Paul's amendment for the three-member phase of the house measure.

The amendment tacked on the welfare board bill lessened somewhat the power of the governor in that it provides that when removal charges are preferred by the governor against any one or all of the board members, the charges shall be subject to public hearing and the removal ratified or rejected by the executive council. The house bill left full power in the chief executive to remove the members.

Halt Action On Marriage Bill

DES MOINES, Feb. 13 (AP)—

In a committee of the whole session late today which developed into a frank discussion of social diseases and how to curb them, the Iowa house plunged deeply into the merits of its "pre-marital" examination but deferred action until Tuesday.

For nearly an hour the lower chamber cast aside its usual parliamentary formality to hear Dr. Robert F. Hansen, head of the venereal disease section of the Iowa state department of health, and then gained further enlightenment by asking questions.

The bill had been considered on the floor of the house earlier in the day, but further action was deferred while a virtual public hearing was arranged with Dr. Hansen as the speaker.

Dr. Hansen drew the interest of many nodding heads when he told the assembly the percentage of syphilis in Iowa is not less than four per cent nor more than six per cent.

Incidence at Iowa State college and the state university, he added, is "less than one per cent," while at Ft. Madison and Anamosa prisons the percentage was 12 to 18 per cent.

Discussing a companion bill, the pre-natal examination measure, the youthful appearing specialist said:

"If there was complete constancy there would be no need for this, but we do and will have erring husbands and wives."

He said the bills would not require an increase in laboratory personnel or facilities at Iowa City.

Court Choice?

JUSTICE LOUIS D. BRANDEIS

Rumors of Rutledge For Court Revived

DIDN'T HIT Rudy Freed of Charge Of Assault

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 13 (AP)—Rudy Vallee was acquitted today of an assault charge filed by a bus boy in a night club who said the orchestra leader struck him when he accidentally brushed his back with a tray. The boy, Dillard Rodney Borden, 17, said Vallee swore at him and hit him on the arm, bruising him and knocking his tray of empty dishes to the floor. Vallee denied striking him but said he turned around suddenly and the boy was pushed.

Extortion Plot Exposed by 2 St. Paul Arrests

ST. PAUL, Feb. 13 (AP)—Charles A. Ward, millionaire manufacturer and political figure here, tonight was described by police as the intended victim of a $15,000 extortion plot whose authors threatened to link him with the unsolved murder of Walter Liggett, Minneapolis weekly publisher.

Police Chief Clinton Hackert said confessions from two men "completely smashed" the attack on the world-adventurer who once worked with Pancho Villa in a Mexican revolution, served a sentence in Leavenworth penitentiary for narcotics possession and rose to be a respected citizen here as an advertising specialty manufacturer.

Chief Hackert said he had confessions from Mathew W. Stregbauer, 31, released from Leavenworth six months ago after serving for hijacking, and Harold McAvoy, 29, former law student turned whiskey salesman.

Paul Contreras, 40, an ash hauler, whom Hackert said was paid a dime as an innocent messenger to pick up a dummy package for the pair, was held as a material witness. Stregbauer and McAvoy will be arraigned in district court tomorrow on attempted extortion charges.

Detective Inspector Charles Tierney said there was no indication that the prisoners possessed incriminating evidence against Ward, a close friend of the late Gov. Floyd B. Olson whom Liggett had bitterly criticized. He said no new information on the machine-gun slaying of Liggett in Minneapolis on Dec. 9, 1935, was uncovered.

Ward received a typewritten letter last Friday marked "personal." Its authors described themselves as ex-convicts needing $15,000 to start a business.

Aged Justice Terminates 23 Years' Service

'A Most Serious Loss to the Court,' Roosevelt Asserts

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13 (AP) Associate Justice Louis D. Brandeis, noted defender of social and economic experimentation in the field of government, stepped down from the supreme court today and into retirement at the age of 82.

With characteristic simplicity, the tall, ascetic jurist, whose grey eyes have peered down from the bar of the tribunal for 23 years, wrote to President Roosevelt in a one-sentence announcement of his withdrawal.

"Pursuant to the act of March 1, 1937, I retire this day from regular active service on the bench," he said.

(The act he referred to enables federal judges who have reached the age of 70 and have served 10 years to retire at full pay. A supreme court judge's pay is $20,000 a year.)

Washington, torn for several years by deep-seated conflict between the new deal and its critics, reacted to Brandeis' announcement with a spontaneous and unstinted expression of praise for the justice's achievements, in which both camps joined.

And, just as promptly, came the usual outburst of conjecture and speculation as to whom his successor would be. Within an hour, western senators were demanding that a westerner be given the place. The names of Judge Harold Stephens of the district court of Columbia court of appeals, a resident of Utah, and Circuit Judge Sam Bratton of New Mexico were mentioned in this connection.

But, since President Roosevelt has sometimes ignored sectional demands in his appointments, other possibilities were not overlooked, such as Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson, Attorney General Murphy, and Dean James M. Landis of the Harvard law school.

It was noted, too, that the Brandeis departure gave Mr. Roosevelt an opportunity to make his fourth appointment to the high bench. He has named Justices Black, Reed and Frankfurter, all of them appointed since the president's great conflict with the court and his defeated proposal to revamp the bench.

Unlike the situations which arose when the president replaced Associate Justices Van Devanter and Sutherland, to whose views he expressed the utmost opposition, no change in the so-called "liberal-conservative" balance of the court could be expected with the naming of Brandeis' successor.

For the economic philosophies of the famous jurist and the president have many things in common. "There must be a power in the states and the nation to remold, through experimentation, our economic practices and institutions to meet changing social and economic needs," Brandeis wrote in a dissenting opinion delivered in 1932. In retrospect, many have pointed to that statement as a forecast of the new deal.

Although ill with an attack of grippe, Mr. Roosevelt lost no time in dispatching a note of regret to Brandeis today.

"One must perform accept the inevitable," he said. "Ever since those days long ago, when you first took your seat on the supreme court bench, I have come to think of you as a necessary and very permanent part of the court—and, since 1933 as one who would continue his fine service there until long after I had left Washington."

"The country has needed you through all these years, and I hope you will realize, as all your old friends do, how unanimous the nation has been in its gratitude to you." Brandeis gave no reason for his withdrawal, but friends of the jurist said it was undoubtedly because of age and ill health. Recently he was laid up for a month with grippe, returning to the bench a week ago today.

The Fight For Life

ON THE battlefields of Spain and China, wars are being fought that take a tremendous toll in human life. At the slightest danger of America's becoming involved in either one of these conflicts, statesmen cry for "isolation" and men and women shudder, thinking of the 126,000 young Americans who died in France 20 years ago.

Without the roar of artillery and the pageantry of war, many more than 126,000 Americans are still dying every year—of cancer. This number is three times as many as are killed in automobile accidents, nearly twice the number who die of tuberculosis, more than 10 times those who die of old age.

Since the days when the Pyramids were built, cancer has been taking its deadly toll. As late as 1900, after centuries of effort, little progress in fighting the disease had been made. Despite surgical development, there were only a handful of persons living five years after operations for cancer. Then came a series of changes in man's knowledge of cancer. Radium was discovered, and physicians learned how to use it and the X-ray. Techniques in pathology and surgery were improved. It was time for an educational program to acquaint both medical and lay men with the new weapons against cancer.

In 1913, a group of doctors and lay persons met to form the American Society for the Control of Cancer, with the expressed purpose: "to disseminate knowledge concerning the symptoms, diagnosis, treatment and prevention of cancer, to investigate the conditions under which cancer is found and to compile statistics in regard thereto."

After many years of experimentation, the society resolved to concentrate on co-operation with the medical profession. This has been satisfactory. Cancer committees have been set up by most state medical societies, including the Iowa society, and there are more than 200 clinics approved by the American College of Surgeons.

Because the program of educating the lay public has been less successful, the Women's Field Army was founded—a group of women throughout the country who are co-operating to disseminate knowledge on the methods of cancer control.

During the month of April, the Army will make a special educational campaign and a drive for funds to support its activities. In Iowa, the Army is headed by Mrs. A. V. O'Brien of Iowa City. A great hope for eventual overcoming of the disease lies in the work of the Women's Field Army, with its slogan, "Fight Cancer With Knowledge, Early Cancer is Curable."

Significant is this message often sent by physicians to the American Society: "We are prepared to diagnose and treat cancer, but the patients come to us too late. Often they have shown the cancer danger signals for months or even years, and yet they seek help only when they are incurable. Can't you teach them to recognize these signals and come to us when they first appear?"

A Great Man Retires—From the Court

LOUIS D. BRANDEIS, who at 82 has resigned from the United States supreme court, best said what can be said when he reported,

DEMOCRACY AND FREEDOM

ed, "behind every argument is someone's ignorance." He believes, as all of us must, that in matters of fact there can be no compromise; there is a right and a wrong. His were the most scholarly decisions to be written by men on the bench. His appointment by Woodrow Wilson in 1916 was important for several reasons. He was the first Jew ever to have been named to the nation's highest court, and those days before nazism or fascism but when there was also intolerance in America, there was objection, much talk about a "dangerous precedent."

His career was the longest, most distinguished of any of those now sitting on the bench. Since then two other Jews have been appointed to the court, both of them also good justices, qualified jurists. Death recently ended Benjamin Cardozo's career, but Justice Felix Frankfurter is just beginning his.

It is probably important that Louis Brandeis wrote more dissenting opinions than any other man on the court. He declined to endorse the majority opinion in the Stock Dividend case, the Duplex printing case and several growing out of the Espionage act. History and a partial court reversal have already backed him up in the first of those.

Now that he has retired, considering his 82 years, it seems logical to assume he may retire to quiet, detached life. Probably he won't. Probably as long as he lives he'll be fighting for a cause he believes is right, just now again that of the Zionist movement in Jerusalem.

For such a man, such a tradition, we can mention no better qualified successor than Dean Wiley B. Rutledge of the college of law.

Knowing Your University

UNIVERSITY OF IOWA students will have an opportunity tomorrow night to see the first in a series of University of Iowa news reels. Behind this project, the premier showing of which is in the nature of an experiment, is a dual purpose: (1) To publicize the university through showings of the news reels to alumni and other out-of-city groups, and (2) to give students a glimpse of activities within their university which they may have missed.

Both of these purposes are vital ones, but we believe it is especially important that students know their own university. Students may easily get into a rut as far as activities are concerned. It is easy to seek always the same types of entertainments, to get into a daily routine of meals, classes and studies that denies the broader viewpoint given by interest in many phases of university life.

If the premier showing tomorrow night of the first University of Iowa news reel creates this greater interest among students in the university itself, the money that has been spent to produce a technicolor picture and the cost of showing it will be entirely justified, we believe.

CLIPPED from other COLUMNS

ADD ABOUT NOTHING A FEW BRITONS are growing excited about the possibility that some untoward act of disrespect might mar the visit of their king and queen to the United States next summer.

Not only are some British writers demanding that President Roosevelt give assurances against soapbox criticisms in Union Square, but they propose cancellation of the royal visit unless newspapers in this country are prohibited from suggesting that there is some ulterior motive behind the trip.

Special offense has been taken in London to the scheme mentioned by Grover Whalen of taking the quintuplets to the New York fair for their majesties, and to a reference to the sovereigns as Bert and Betty.

Finally, the United States has been warned that it frightened away the Duke of Windsor by the hullabaloo it stirred up over his association with Charles F. Bedaux, speedup engineer.

This will probably leave all Americans except specially ambitious dowagers rather cold.

Any crisis in this country which followed cancellation of the Windsor visit was purely coincidental. We weathered that disappointment.

We shall all welcome the British rulers, and hope they enjoy their visit here.

But we shan't gag the nation for the event.

It is not likely that they will hear any worse of themselves here than is spoken every day in their own land.

Rutledge Says, No Closed Shop On Liberty in a Democracy

(February 19 has been designated as National Brotherhood Day by the National Conference of Christians and Jews. The purpose of this organization is to help make America safe for differences, and to create an atmosphere of good will and understanding. The Daily Iowan will publish an article each day this week written by an Iowa citizen on this important subject. By DEAN WILEY RUTLEDGE, College of Law, State University of Iowa

"Democracy is on trial" is the theme song of the thirties. It is true. We pay the same eternal price for liberty as did our fathers and will our children. Democracy isn't a system of security. It's a great gamble. It means we have to take chances; chances with things we like and chances with things we hate. There isn't any closed shop on liberty in a democracy. It's not a thing just for me and mine. The other fellow has title to it as "good and merchantable" as yours. He may be black, or white, yellow or brown; ignorant or learned; rich or poverty-ridden; curly-, kinky- or straight-haired; cross-eyed or wall-eyed; bow-legged or knock-kneed. Whatever his state or condition, his views or his attitudes, he is a man and is to be given the dignity of manhood. Any nation which refuses this to any citizen or class of citizens is to that extent not a democracy but a tyranny. For that reason the old south, an impossible mixture of white freedom and black slavery, had to go.

But democracy is not anarchy and liberty is not license. Neither I nor the man I hate can be free to do as we please. Choice we must have, but not unlimited choice. Some things we must not do. If we do others, we must be responsible for the consequences. Democracy therefore is a system of limited and responsible freedom. Where my freedom ends is where the other fellow's begins. His rights limit and define mine.

Nor can the definition be left to us. Others must tell me where to stop and him where to begin. So, we must have law. The court replaces the duel; the legislature supplants the unrestrained power of each to decide for himself. They make the rules and act as umpire, while we play the game. It's a game that has room for home-runs and strike-outs. But there are also fouls.

Baseball without umpires would be a grand row. Democracy without law would be anarchy. But no umpire can take the place of rules of the game; and the best umpire can't make a good game if the rules are bad. Both the rules and the umpire must be fair.

Otherwise the game is spoiled. So, with democracy. It isn't enough for baseball just to have rules. It isn't enough for democracy just to have laws. The rules must give a fair chance to both sides. In a democracy the laws must give a fair chance to all men. Rules can't make big men small or small men big. Neither can laws. But rules can say to big men, it's unfair for you to do this or that to other men, big or little. They can even say to big men, you can't do some things to little men which it's all right for you to try to do to other big ones. The "handicap" in sports may be the fairest of all rules. But a true "handicap" never takes out of the game all of the elements of chance and skill. Its proper function is to equalize, not to eliminate them, to make the competition fair, not to destroy it. A baseball game without room for the play of chance and skill would be as dull as one without rules and umpires would be exciting. So with democracy, liberty and law.

It's a great game, but not a cut-and-dried affair. The regions of liberty are ever changing. The chances are not equal, but they can't be too unequal. Skill must count, but not too much. Democracy is a perpetual compromise, ever shifting in its major incidence upon particular human interests, between security and change. What it gives or permits to us today it takes away tomorrow. But always it brings to us and to others new freedoms to take the place of those which vanish with the past. What men lose today as individuals they gain tomorrow as groups. Thus democracy fills tomorrow with opportunities just as glorious and responsibilities just as great as it gave us yesterday. Its work is not finished. It is only beginning. I envy those who are entering the game now. The gridiron and the diamond will be in the new stadium rather than the sandlot. But the game will be the same thrilling one we've always played, though perhaps we can make it fairer still.

AROUND THE TOWN With MERLE MILLER

THIS 'N THAT Note by the papers that our Jack Chase is Hollywood bound and, while wishing him good luck, wondered if his thespian way is what Hollywood's looking for. I remember his U. theater appearance.

Of course, judging from some of the recent cinema exhibits I've happened on, not being able to act won't be noticed much in the Camera city.

And Sunday thumbed through Bob Nathan's "Journey of Taboola," which goes with my list of unforgettable dog-stories (No A. P. Terhune). Right beside Woolcott's "The Story of Verdun Belle," I think.

Dog stories are pleasant reading these days. The characters hardly ever have innuendoes about the Yurpinn sitcheashun.

Incidentally, if Chase and Sanborn're smart they'd better grab on to Eric Blore, the funniest man in screen or radio.

An over-the-tea-cup pal of mine wonders these days, his second year of hours without end in I. C. "For the first time in my life," he tells me, "I don't know what people're thinking."

The answer being, of course, that most of us aren't. The number of those using their minds even in this Iowa Athens could be counted on four or five handfuls of fingers.

For example, the Newspaper Iowa Depends Upon goes unread daily in most of the club-houses about, male or female. Barring, naturally, those yellow sheets they insert in the middle.

It's occurred to me, too, that the reason some professors have to read the rolls every day is because, in the largely fraternity-sorority snaps especially, all the enrollees look exactly alike.

Abandonment It's nice to know that "hell"

TUNING IN By Loren Hickerson

WHEN BENNY GOODMAN and his swing school broadcast from the "city of brotherly love," at 8:30 tonight over the Columbia network, a surprise swing arrangement of "Trees" will be featured.

Goodman will be in Philadelphia on an eastern personal appearance of three-J design: jam, jive and jitterbug, assisted by swing's greatest song-writing historian, composer Johnny Mercer.

GEORGE JESSEL becomes a comic valentine on the "For Men Only" program over NBC's Red network at 7:30 tonight. He steps in as master of ceremonies because Fred Ugal, regular master of ceremonies, goes to Florida with Paul Whiteman.

Some of the stars George will present include Franchot Tone, movie star and dramatic head man of the Broadway hit, "The Gentile People"; Lefty Gomez, star Yankee pitcher, and others.

Peter Van Steeden's orchestra and the singing of the Merry Maes will also be heard on the program.

EDNA MAY OLIVER, whose face is her fortune, will be Bob Hope's guest on his weekly funfest at 9 o'clock tonight over NBC's Red network.

Addition of this acid-tongued comedienne to the Hope show chalks up another victory for the Patsy Kelly-Glenda Farrell type of woman—the type who hecks to the sarcasm and lets the hecklers fall where they may.

With Hope and his guest star will be Patsy Kelly, Skinnay Ennis and Jerry Calonna, all regulars on the coast-to-coast show.

FIBBER MCGEE is going to be busy today. First, he'll guest star with Parky-skarkus and Al Jolson on the latter's program at 7:30 over the coast-to-coast Columbia network. After the last joke has bounced out on the kilocycles, Fibber will hurry over to Hollywood's NBC studios for his weekly appearance on his own show, heard at 8:30 over the NBC-Red network.

I mean Peace Conferences could be something besides words. But they seldom are.

Today's collected venom might be possibly explained by those two lines Dodie Smith collected: "On the first spring day, The devil's to pay."

Trouble is I'm not having enough fun.

A New Yorker at Large By George Tucker

NEW YORK—Anton Bruhl is a superb color photographer, maybe the best on earth. That's my opinion. That's all drama criticism or any criticism ever is, one man's word. I don't know any other color photographers, and I never knew Bruhl until his pictures began to stick in my mind and stay there and made me think about them. You would think he was a native, if you saw his pictures, but he has been there only once, and that for one day 20 years ago on his way to America from Australia. He is Australian born. His father was a ship's doctor and never left Australia after landing there one day. Among Bruhl's favorite models are Dana Jennie, Susan Shaw, Elsie Knox and Pualani Mossman. All except Pualani are blondes. Jet black hair, he says, is difficult to photograph and even more difficult to reproduce. When he selects a girl she must have these qualities—youth, health, and "average beauty." This means a buoyancy of spirit that shows through the eyes and in the smile. Technical beauty ("the kind that stuns") isn't necessary at all. But all of his models are pretty. Dana Jennie, who is now in Paris to model new styles for Harpers Bazaar, is the sophisticated type. He mentioned this, but explained that ultra sophistication is never essential, because "sophisticated people aren't average people." Pualani Mossman is his favorite model for pictures with a South Seas locale, "because she epitomizes the mood, knows what to do, is easy to work with, and photographs beautifully." That's quite a recommendation.

Prof. Porter Talks to Club At Luncheon

County Consolidation Plan Explained At Women's Gathering

"No end of county consolidation would reduce the unit of county government," asserted Prof. Kirk Porter of the university political science department at a luncheon meeting of the League of Women Voters yesterday in the north conference room of Iowa Union.

"County consolidation isn't worth considering," he continued pointing out the disadvantages and obstacles in the way of successful realization of the plan.

"In considering township consolidation, he explained that the township was rapidly passing out of existence, and that its functions were being taken over by the county.

"It is wiser to have the county services tied up closely with the state agencies," he said, in discussing the county manager plan. He then explained the Iowa county-commissioner form of government.

The ideal situation, according to Professor Porter, would be a limited manager government with a county business office set up and staffed by a competent manager and staff operating it. Agencies of county government would be merely administrative units of the state departments.

After his address, Professor Porter conducted an open forum discussion.

Know Your University—

Iowa Departments Hang Out the Wash

By D. MAC SHOWERS
Assistant Campus Editor

Every day is wash day at the University of Iowa!

The largest laundry in Iowa and one of the largest institutional laundries in the United States is operated in Iowa City by the university.

The university laundry does the washing for all university buildings including hospitals, dormitories, dining services, as well as the laundry for hospital nurses and internes.

Four million pounds of clothes, linen, bed clothes, rugs, drapes, and curtains are washed annually, with an average capacity of about 80 thousand pounds every week.

Naturally, Monday is the busiest wash day and the laundry washes about 12 tons of goods on that day alone.

Because there is no other laundry in the state which could handle the washing which must be done every day for University hospital and other college departments, it is necessary for the university to operate its own laundry service.

There will be found in use the most modern and efficient machinery, methods, and materials available. New machines, saving labor, time; those which will do a better job are installed from time to time in order to do the work more thoroughly.

Chemistry plays a very important part in the processes employed there in washing, rinsing, and spot removing. The extensive use of soaps in four different washing processes forms an alkalinity in the fabrics which cannot be removed with four ordinary rinses.

To counteract this alkaline condition, a fifth rinse called a "sour rinse" is used; sodium acid fluoride is added to the water. This mild acid neutralizes the alkalinity, making the fabrics whiter and giving them longer life.

If the alkaline condition is still present when clothes are pressed, the heat changes the alkali to starch, discoloring the white cloth. All uniforms, towels, and linen washed by the laundry must be white and spotless and must be washed with a process which insures the longest possible usage.

Let's follow a basket of goods through the laundry.

Goods to be washed are picked up in large canvas baskets at every university building. The articles range from cleaning rags used by janitors to napkins from various university dining services.

These baskets are hauled to the laundry, put into the unloading chute which carries them into the basement where the materials are weighed and sorted according to color and kind of cloth.

Departmental articles—towels or napkins—are placed in large net bags and tagged with a number for identification. The clothing of each nurse and interne is pinned together and numbered. Articles go through the wash by number, losing all identification by name until they are again sorted in the wrapping room on the third floor of the building.

After sorting, the goods are put into the large washers. There are six of these in the university laundry, different machines having a capacity of 300, 400, or 800 pounds of clothing. Running at full capacity, these washers will launder 25,000 pounds of clothing every hour.

Scientific processes are employed in washing. Each wash has a change of water from nine to 12 times during the process. Here is the procedure for white clothes:

- 1—Suds with water at a temperature of 100 degrees.
- 2 and 3—Suds with hot water.
- 4—Suds with water at a temperature of 160 degrees.
- 5—Rinse with hot water.
- 6—Rinse with warm water.
- 7—Rinse with hot water.
- 8—Rinse with warm water.
- 9—"Sour rinse" with bluing and cold water.
- 10—Starching.

The process is sterile in all respects, and when the clothes have passed through, they are thoroughly pasteurized. The bacteria count of the last rinse is far below that of ordinary drinking water.

The washers in which this process is used are large rotating cylinders, set by a clock. After each part of the process, the clock automatically stops the cylinders and drains the water.

This automatic shut-off system enables one man to operate all six washers at the same time. The washers do not move continuously in the same direction, but alternate directions every six revolutions.

When the goods come out of the washers, they are put into centrifugal driers. These are large circular vats which turn at a speed of 900 revolutions per minute, drawing the moisture out by centrifugal force. This process removes about 50 per cent of the water in the goods.

The wringing process is not used, for it breaks buttons, tears fabrics. The university laundry has four driers, three with a capacity of 200 pounds of clothes each, and a new machine which will dry 400 pounds of clothes at a time.

From the driers, the goods are sent upstairs to finish drying. There they are pressed and folded. Two large-capacity ironing and drying machines, one for towels and pillow cases, the other for sheets and bed spreads, are in operation. Damp goods are fed into the driers, and after passing over steam-filled rollers, they come out dry and pressed. Then they are folded and put into their respective baskets.

The folding process, especially of the sets, is rhythmic, requiring sufficient skill to fold rapidly and efficiently. Five hundred pounds of towels and pillow cases can be pressed in an hour; 1,000 pounds of sheets can be finished in that time.

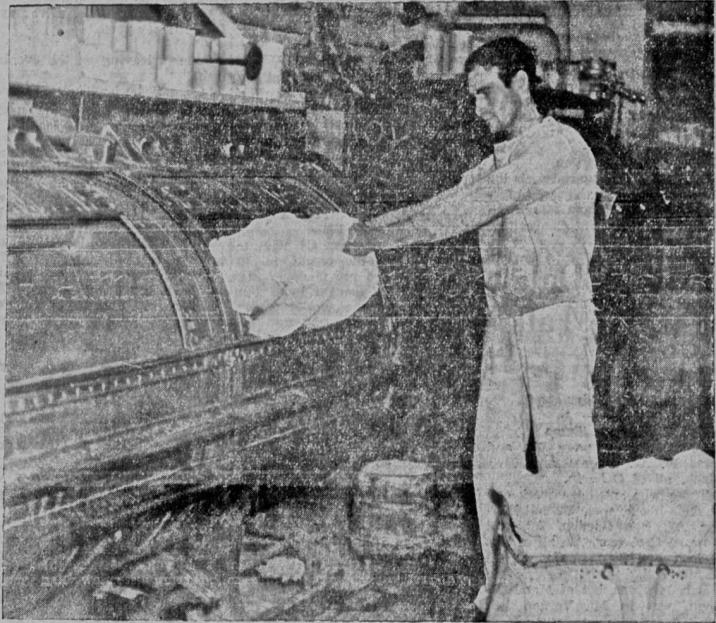

A new machine, installed recently, dries and presses handker-

The actual washing, of course, is the most important part of the laundering procedure. The university laundry puts white clothes through nine different washing processes. There are six large cylinder washers like the one Earl Denison is filling here. In all, the laundry washes four million pounds of clothes a year.

As always, the biggest wash day is Monday, when the laundry processes about 12 tons of goods. As much as 80,000 pounds is laundered each week.

The Clothes are Scientifically Dried...

pounds of goods at a time. The driers rotate at a speed of 900 revolutions per minute, drawing the moisture out of the clothes by centrifugal force. After the goods have been partially dried here, they are taken upstairs where sheets and towels are dried and pressed in the large steam-filled roller presses, and clothes are pressed by hand and in individual machines.

The Ironing Job Begins...

All uniforms and other clothes are pressed on these steam-heated presses. Cora Bradley is shown here at that work. The article being pressed above is a Currier hall waitress' uniform.

There are several of these machines in operation all the time, each worker taking care of two or three of them at a time. One machine presses backs and fronts of shirts; another presses the sleeves, and a third presses the cuffs and collar—all at the same time. All clothing is gone over by hand ironers to touch up around the collar, cuffs and buttons.

Then Finishing Touches Are Added

Finally, after pieces are pressed, they are gone over carefully to be sure that there are no scorched or torn places. Then they are folded and individually wrapped. Tears are mended. At the extreme left of this picture can be seen a machine pressing shirt sleeves. An educational service of the university laundry is the research field which it provides for engineering students and home economics seniors. Engineers come to the laundry to make time studies of the workers and their processes. They also offer suggestions to make the work easier and faster, then they time the worker using an improved process.

chiefs and napkins at the rate of 300 pieces per hour. For bath towels and other goods which do not need pressing, the drying is completed in large "fluff driers," which work like the washers with hot air instead of water.

Pressing of uniforms and other clothing is done by individual machines and finished by hand. Most of this work is done on steam-heated presses; hand irons press around the cuffs and collars. After pressing, each article is individually inspected, folded, and wrapped.

At least 50 different solutions are used in this process. Often a spot must be tested for its chemical make-up in order to determine what solution will remove it. Preparations used are prepared by the university pharmacy service.

Water softened in the basement of the building is used in all cleaning processes. After softening, the water is pumped into a large outside tank for storage. From here it is pumped to the various parts of the building. Hot water used in the laundry is heated by steam-filled coils in two large tanks.

L. A. Bradley, manager of the laundry, pointed out the saving afforded by using soft water. He explained that while the present softener was being installed, hard water was used just as it came into the plant.

During this time, the washing processes used 10 barrels of soap in a week, but with the soft water, the laundry uses only two barrels of soap a week.

The plant uses one and a quarter million gallons of water in a month and an average of 5,000 gallons every hour. Safety is observed throughout the plant. All machines have automatic shut-offs and other safety devices.

Employees work eight hours a day and have a 10-minute rest period in the middle of the afternoon. The laundry employs 45 persons, seven of whom are men and the rest women. There are also five part-time student helpers.

As well as being a practical service to the university, the laundry is used for educational purposes. Senior engineering students come to the laundry to make time studies of the workers at various jobs. They study the operations and offer suggestions for speeding up the work or for making it easier. Many of these suggestions are helpful. Last year three engineering students based their thesis work on laundry operations.

Examples of this work are shown by two experiments now going on. One is an attachment for a hand iron designed to speed up the work. While the iron is in use, a stop-watch tests the efficiency of the device.

Another student suggested a different system for operating the handkerchief and napkin drier. It made possible the drying and pressing of several more pieces every hour.

The home economics senior classes also make extensive studies of various operations in the plant. They observe what different fabrics require different washing and pressing treatments; study the spot removing processes, and other chemical processes employed in washing clothes.

A function of the laundry is the testing of fabrics before large purchases are made by the university. Samples of sheets, towels, etc., which are to be bought, are washed 20 times. After this processing they are tested for tensile strength, shrinkage, and wear.

The university laundry is constantly adopting new or improved methods and materials to improve or make easier the work. Many helpful suggestions are received each month from the American Institute of Laundering, which carries on extensive research to find new and better ways of laundering.

DEATH AT THE MANOR

READ THIS FIRST:

Elsie Ritter, a beauty shop operator, taking the place of a friend for a week in the private salon of Mrs. Horace Witherspoon, Sr., finds herself involved in a murder mystery when first the eccentric old lady and later, her middle-aged daughter-in-law are found dead under the same hair drier. Elsie was attending each at the time, though out of the salon for a few moments before discovering the old lady's death. A string of emeralds, belonging to Mrs. Witherspoon, Sr., are strangely missing.

CHAPTER TWENTY

CHIEF ELLIS grinned when Richard referred to him as a jackass. "Suppose," he suggested gently, "suppose you tell me what you know?"

"Richard doesn't know a thing," Daphne cried. "He wasn't in the house this morning."

"No? And where was he?" "I was in town," Richard informed him savagely, "and what I was doing is none of your business!"

"Richard is excited," his sister put in quickly. "He was doing some errands for me—at the drug store!"

"That right, son?" "Yes," the boy admitted sullenly, "that's right."

"All right. We can check on that," Ellis waved him aside. "Now, Miss Witherspoon, you haven't told me where you went after leaving the salon."

"I went to Miss Westcott's room. I helped her pack."

"She is leaving on the evening train?" "Oh, no, she isn't!" Ellis contradicted her. "No one leaves this house until I give the word."

"But, officer!" Glad Westcott protested this order. She rolled her big eyes in his direction. "I've simply got to catch the evening train. My mother's expecting me."

"Sorry," he refused to be vamped. "No one can leave. Where were you this morning when you weren't packing?"

"She is leaving on the evening train?" "Oh, no, she isn't!" Ellis contradicted her. "No one leaves this house until I give the word."

"Did anyone see you there?" "Why, officer?" Chief Ellis' neck turned fiery red.

"One up for Georgia," whispered Phil, and I giggled, but sickly. "Quiet, please!" Ellis glared at us. "Now you, Miss—" he signaled Della Craig. "What have you to say?"

The actress regarded her coldly. "Nothing whatsoever." She had evidently made up her mind not to forgive his earlier lapse.

"You were a friend of the deceased?" "Naturally."

"She invited you here?" "The family invited me."

"I see you of Della Craig, the actress, are you not?" "I am."

"And where were you this morning?" "In my boudoir."

"So?" He regarded her suspiciously. "What were you doing there?" "I was writing letters."

"Alone?" Della's glance would have frozen an Eskimo. "Quite!"

"All right." His eyes rested upon Toots Lemoine, and that young woman twisted and untwisted her jeweled fingers in her lap.

"Miss Lemoine?" He consulted a scrap of paper in his hand. "That's me," affirmed Toots, and crossed her legs so that her silken shafts were revealed above her knee.

"You are a guest here?" "Yeah."

"A friend of the deceased?" "Not exactly." She cocked her head to one side and exploded her bombshell. "I'm engaged to Richard Witherspoon!"

"No!" cried Daphne involuntarily. "No!" "Say!" Toots forgot her role of lady and reverted to type. "Are you calling me a liar? Ask him! Ask your darling little brother! Go on, ask him!" She glared at Richard. The boy's eyes were glued to her face. Once at a street carnival I saw a snake the glazed eyes of which watched those of the Egyptian snake charmer who owned him as Richard's watched Toots. He was as if mesmerized; he bobbed his head jerkily at her command.

"It's true," he said, and he sounded as hopeless as a man can sound. "We're engaged."

"Did Mrs. Witherspoon approve of your engagement, Miss Lemoine?" "She—she didn't know."

"Secret, eh?" "No, it wasn't!" Toots denied quickly. "We just made up our minds this morning."

"While Richard was in town?" Ellis demanded shrewdly. "Never your mind when!" Toots was losing her temper.

"Well," he changed the subject, "maybe you can tell me where you were between eleven and eleven-fifteen this morning?"

"I was in bed," snapped Toots, and this time the chief let well enough alone.

It was Count Orsini's turn next. He answered promptly—too promptly, in my opinion—the questions put to him. He was, he explained smoothly, a guest in the house at the invitation of his fiancée, Miss Daphne Witherspoon. He had met Miss Daphne in Paris the winter before through mutual friends. Ellis got nothing from him save the fact that he had spent the morning in his room, and had been seen there as late as eleven o'clock by the maid who entered to change his bed.

"I'll get to the servants later," promised the chief, and then turned to Jeffrey Todington. "Are you also engaged to one of the ladies present?" he inquired sarcastically. "I am not," Jeffrey's face flushed, and I guessed he was trying to remain cool and collected and refrain from punching the chief of police on the nose.

It turned out that Jeffrey was a house guest at the Manor at Mr. Richard's invitation. Mr. Richard and he were fraternity brothers and Jeffrey was a family friend of long standing. There was no mention made of his relations or former relations with Daphne, but, then, I guess a man naturally does not boast of being jilted by the girl he loves. And Jeffrey was in love with Daphne. Any fool could tell that by the way he looked at her. "And where did you spend the morning?"

"I was in the aboretum, and as far as I know no one saw me there."

"Communicating with nature, eh?" Ellis was losing his temper. "That's my business!" Jeffrey's coolness threatened to rise to fever pitch.

"And mine," added the chief soberly. "Everything connected with this household is my business—now!" And at his words I had another shivering spell.

What secrets would this policeman unearth before he had finished with us? What skeletons would he drag forth from dark closets? I stole a quick glance about the room. Others, evidently, shared my fear and wonder.

NEWS-OF THE WORLD IN BRIEF

Japan Aggressive

TOKYO, Feb. 14 (Tuesday) (AP)—The admiralty announced today that Japanese marines made a new landing at dawn today on the south coast of Hainan island and were advancing to meet the force which landed on the north coast last Friday.

The reinforcements occupied several towns apparently without opposition, the admiralty said.

The announcement was made after Sir Robert Leslie Craigie, British ambassador, had visited Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita and requested information on Japan's plans on the island near French Indo-China and Britain's colonies at Singapore and Hongkong.

Arita's reply was said to have been similar to that given yesterday to the French ambassador, Charles Arsene Henry.

Oppose State Move

DES MOINES, Feb. 13 (AP)—A group of "highway boosters" drawn from the four corners of Iowa moved on the statehouse this afternoon determined to halt diversion of primary road funds for farm-to-market road purposes.

Among them were publishers, county supervisors, county engineers, a former highway commissioner, former legislators and members of chambers of commerce.

Declare Truce

DES MOINES, Feb. 13 (AP)—Enemy camps in the Iowa legislative liquor fight agreed to a truce today over the procedural fate of the Morrow local option bill.

Foes of the measure in the house liquor committee said they would report the proposal without recommendation at the committee's next formal meeting Friday. In return, Rep. H. E. Morrow (R), Hopkinton, the bill's author, said he would agree tomorrow to recommend the measure to the committee.

In the last scheduled game of the round robin basketball tournament of women's physical education teams, the juniors defeated the senior team by a score of 10 to 5 yesterday afternoon.

This victory tied the juniors and sophomores for first place in the team ratings. This tie will be played off in a game Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

Players on the junior team were: forwards: Isabelle Armstrong, A3 of Hutchinson, Kan., captain; Jane Fink, A3 of Louisville, Ky., and Wilma Kerr, A3 of Washington. Guards on the team were: Phyllis Whitmore, A2 of Batavia; Metty Brown, A3 of Hutchinson, Kan., and Neva Mae Littlejohn, A3 of Sioux City.

Wonderland! Visitors Extol Beauty Of Caverns

"I had no conception of the enormity and beauty of Carlsbad Caverns until I actually saw them, although I had heard of this marvel of nature for sometime."

Such is the comment so often made by visitors to the Carlsbad Caverns National Park, reached out of El Paso, Tex., according to representatives of the Rock Island lines, which are offering special inducements for travelers to stop over and tour the caverns.

Figures just released by the department of interior show that the attendance at the Carlsbad Caverns during 1938 materially increased over the previous year, with a total of more than 205,000 persons making the trip through this subterranean wonderland.

It is pointed out that, unlike many other national parks, Carlsbad Caverns are open to visitors the year round, situated as they are in Southeast New Mexico, the temperature the same no matter what the season. Another interesting feature of these caverns is the fact that they are constantly being enlarged by new explorations, and while three main levels are known, only two are yet open to the public.

Incidentally, the caverns were first discovered in 1901. The caverns are served by electric elevator service and the trails are so constructed as to make walking possible with a minimum of effort throughout the electric lighted tour.

Incidentally, Carlsbad Caverns National Park has become an interesting spot for botanists, due to the many types of plants found only in that section. Train schedules are so arranged on the Golden State route of the Rock Island-Southern Pacific to California, that visitors may stop over at El Paso, Tex., and make the trip to see the caverns and return between trains, with a visit to Juarez, Mexico, if desired.

The caverns are under the supervision of Col. Thomas Boles, superintendent of the park, whose corps of guides conduct the visitors throughout the tours.

2 Russian Engineers Inspect Chemistry Dept. of University

Visitors last Saturday at the chemistry department included two Russian engineers from Moscow who were representing the Soviet government. The men were A. P. Skliarenko and R. I. Roshkovan. They were accompanied by A. S. Lossev of New York City.

They were in Iowa City as representatives of the Amtorg Trading company of New York City, which is the American agency for Russian goods.

HAUGHLEY (AP)—The Rev. W. Grainge White, vicar of this parish, has organized an antigossip squad to track and report to him on scandal mongers' activities.

They are: A. P. Skliarenko, A4 of Iowa City, and Katheryn Stanley, A4 of Oskaloosa. Guards were Lenore Morgan, A4 of Des Moines; Helen Edgar, A4 of Cedar Rapids, and Elizabeth Fowler, A4 of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Predicts Engineering Merger Bill Has No Chance To Carry

Legislators Are Proud of SUL, Speakers Say

Ask Republicans Not To Judge Legislature By Bills Introduced

By B. FRANKLIN CARTER JR. Daily Iowan City Editor

Assurance that the bill in the state legislature which would combine the engineering college at the university with that of Iowa State college at Ames will not be passed was expressed by two members of the state legislature at the Lincoln day dinner held last night at the Jefferson hotel.

Representative William Morrison of Iowa City and Harold Claypool of Williamsburg asked the hundred local republicans who observed the 130th birthday of Lincoln at the dinner not to judge the present republican legislature by the bills which were introduced into the general assembly.

Representative Claypool, an Iowa law graduate and a member of the legislative committee which visited the university last Saturday, told the audience that he didn't want the people of Iowa City to form a false opinion that the new legislature has a malice toward the university.

He asserted:

"I can assure that the legislature is just as proud of the state university as you Iowa Citizens are. Americans at times have a tendency to go to extremes. The present state legislature was elected on an economy program of coordination and consolidation.

"Some honest soul has gone to an extreme to introduce this bill. I do not believe that this bill will ever be reported out of the committee to be voted upon, and if it does reach a vote, it will be overwhelmingly defeated."

Morrison, the Johnson county representative, said that all of the representatives are honest in their convictions, but that differences of opinion will arise in any group of 108 men.

Referring to the bill to disestablish the college of engineering at the university, he said:

"Someone had a sincere idea that the coordination of the two engineering schools was possible. We all make mistakes in the legislature. The concerted action of Iowa Citizens and other friends of the university made this error apparent.

"Errors such as this happen because we all have a desire for economy and a reduction in taxation."

Prof. Roy C. Flickinger of the classical languages department at the university, toastmaster at the banquet, raised the question of increasing the appropriation for the maintenance of the university and the salaries of the instructors.

He pointed out that although the university appropriation had been cut several years ago, the members of the legislature did not reduce their own compensation, and the incomes of other groups in the state have been restored to the former level or increased.

In comparing the wages received by university instructors to that of the legal profession, Professor Flickinger said that according to a recent report of the American Bar association only two per cent of its members receive more than $15,000 a year.

Claiming that University of Iowa instructors should receive a comparable wage, he declared:

"Iowa City residents know that the university has been rated by a competent authority as belonging in the highest dozen of American universities, and that a full professor of head professor here belongs well within the highest two per cent of his profession. After long years of expensive training he should not be rated as a tenant farmer or one of the less successful members of a profession."

He continued to show that the law of supply and demand establishes the salaries of university professors as well as in other fields. He maintained that under the present scale many men have already left the Iowa staff for better places elsewhere and that this process has only started.

He warned:

"What is worse, the present salaries will not attract men of the right calibre to fill vacancies as they arise and the scholastic standing of the whole institution will inevitably deteriorate in the near future.

"Soon the staff will consist of competent men who have grown grey in its service, the victims of the state's ingratitude, younger men too poor to get calls elsewhere, with whom the university is 'stuck', and men of inferior attainments who can alone be secured for the salaries offered."

He added that there would also be a group of promising young-

Lincoln Day Dinner Speakers

Representatives Harold Claypool and William Morrison, members of the Iowa house of representatives from Iowa and Johnson counties respectively, told the 100 Iowa City republicans who celebrated the 130th birthday of Abraham Lincoln at a dinner in the Jefferson hotel last night that the bill which would combine the engineer schools of the university and Iowa State college at Ames would probably never be passed. Prof. Roy C. Flickinger of the classical languages department warned those attending the dinner that the wage scale of the university instructors should be raised to prevent a disintegration of the scholastic standing of the university.

Economic Status of All WPA Workers in Johnson County To Be Probed Within 2 Weeks

Will Eliminate From Relief Rolls Those Not in Actual Need

Economic status of every WPA worker in Johnson county will be checked and reviewed within two weeks, John S. Barry of the Social Service league announced yesterday.

Each county in the United States, Barry said, is required to make the investigation before March 25. The purpose, according to George J. Keller, Iowa WPA administrator, is to eliminate those not in actual need from relief rolls.

The review will cover 245 assigned and working WPA men in this county as well as 69 certified workers, Barry revealed. Keller announced that the action resulted from an order contained in a recent congressional appropriation setting aside $750,000,000 to finance the WPA through June 30.

"This order by congress means the case of every WPA employee must be reviewed and his need for employment and public aid re-established," Keller explained. The review, Keller said, is being made for three chief reasons:

1. To establish validity of the certification which entitles the worker to his employment on WPA.

2. To determine his continuity of employment on WPA projects. This phase of the review is an effort to determine the number of workers who have been on projects for a long time, which in turn is an attempt to discover whether or not such workers have made any attempt to find other employment.

3. To ascertain degrees of need of the number of dependents each worker represents. This is an effort to determine the accuracy of the claim often made that there are too low budgetary cases not being able to find WPA employment.

Local investigation will probably start later this week, Barry said. The Social Service league, headed by Frances Wilson, certifies all local WPA workers before such work is given.

Relief from subzero week end temperatures continued yesterday, the mercury climbing from a low of 31 to a high of 54 degrees, stepping far above the 16 to 36 degree normal range on the thermometer.

Last year, however, a spring like temperature of 61 degrees was reached after a contrastingly low 28 reading.

sters who had been called to higher ranks than their attainments justified and who, if they developed, will soon be called away.

Before the speakers, a program by three Iowa City high school music students and Anthony Paciotti, A4 of Virginia, Minn., was presented. The musicians, Joan Joehnk, a soprano; Fletcher Miller, saxophone, and Lester Taylor, baritone, gave solos. Paciotti read "The Perfect Tribute," telling of Lincoln's Gettysburg address.

Moose Officers, Committees To Have 2nd Stag

Kozek to Be Guest Of Honor, Owned Steer To Be Served

Officers and entertainment committees of Iowa City Moose lodge yesterday announced the second stag banquet of this season to be held in the local lodge's banquet hall at 6:30 Thursday night.

One of the guests of honor will be Bernard Kozek of Elberon whose prize-winning 4-H club steer will be served as the special feature of the menu for Thursday night's banquet.

In addition to Kozek, Raymond Ohlinger, A1 of Mooseheart, Ill., and Robert Tindall, A3 of Iowa City, both graduates of Mooseheart, will appear on the program. They will speak on the agricultural activities and other events in the lives of the boys who attend Mooseheart.

Mooseheart is the city of the 1,700 children of Moose members in which Tindall spent seven years and Ohlinger eight years. It is located near Aurora, Ill., and maintained by the national organization of Moose lodges to give an academic and vocational education to its members' children.

The prize-winning steer which will be served Thursday night was placed on the auctioneer's block for sale after the completion of the International Livestock show in Chicago recently. Jesse Lackender, expert livestock judge and member of the Iowa City Moose, was the high bidder.

Kozek, 15, raised this steer which had won sixth place at the Chicago livestock show. Other of his winnings have been at the Benton county and Iowa State fairs in 1937 and 1938.

Conflict began last Tuesday when the Building Trades council

Townsend Club In Local Drive

Chairman Reports 200 Signatures On Petitions Obtained

Townsend club members of Iowa City in a drive of national scope are circulating a petition here to the state legislature to memorialize congress to enact the Townsend National Recovery Plan recalled 27 men from work on the high school contending that Minnesota labor was being employed in preference to Iowa labor.

Hede's hearing on a warrant issued Wednesday was scheduled for tomorrow in the court of T. M. Fairchild, justice of the peace.

Acceptance by the state legislature of the petitions would signify Iowa's approval of the bill, Dielch said. As the bill is now being considered by the ways and means committee of the house of representatives and will soon be introduced there, it is important that the states make known to congress their stand on the issue, he continued.

Headquarters for the drive have been established at the office of H. G. Wengert, 108 S. Linn, and will be open every day for a week to give information and literature and as a matter of convenience for those wishing to sign petitions.
