Chicago Doctors Advance New Theory of Cause and Growth of Cancer

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE
Associated Press Science Editor
MILWAUKEE, June 19—A new theory of the cause and growth of cancer was announced to the American association for the advancement of science here today by Doctors J. E. Davis and H. E. Schmitz of Mercy hospital, Chicago. They said they have discovered the well known dye, indigo blue, and the poisonous gas, cyanogen, in internal human cancers. They show how the dye may start cancer, and how the gas may keep it growing. They told of tests indicating that everyone has a little indigo blue in his system. It exists usually in the form of indigo white. This is a well known form of the blue dye, and is in fact the only substance from the Asiatic shrub that produces the dye. The colorless stuff is used commercially to dye textiles, and exposure to oxygen in the air turns the white stuff a permanent blue. Cyanogen, colorless and odorless, is common in the body in small amounts in the form of thiocyanate. A medical dictionary says cyanosis is a common medical name for the extremities and lips turning blue and often is associated with death. The way the dye and the gas cause cancer, the Chicago doctors said, is by reducing the amount of oxygen used by cancer tissues. This lowered oxygen, they pointed out, along with excess use of sugar, is the most characteristic chemical symptom of cancer, and a fact that has been verified widely and often. Starting with this low oxygen as their main clue, the doctors cut down the oxygen supply of some of the organs of rats, by tying off some of the blood vessels. Most of the animals developed either cancer or abnormal growths in the oxygen starved organs. Next the scientists started a hunt for natural causes which might lower the oxygen supply in both human and animal tissues. They found both the dye and the cyanogen gas. They concluded that the body changes the indigo white occasionally to indigo blue because the colored form aids during disease in stopping loss of blood from veins and arteries into the tissues. Ordinarily this indigo blue has the power to turn back into the white form. But in cancers, they explained, the dye loses its ability to change color, helps to form a barrier against oxygen and so initiates the conditions of cancer.

They based their belief that the gas spreads the wild growth on the fact that they found pockets of the cyanogen only near or in the edges of the cancerous growths. Cyanogen, also, they explained, helps to lower the amount of oxygen in living tissues.

A Woman With Vision

BEGINNING today on the University campus are the opening sessions of the 13th Iowa conference on child development and parent education. Dealing this year with the problems of youth, the conference is one of the outstanding events on the campus. Its practical nature for the state and the nation is so great that nation-wide attention results.

Back of the conference is a story that is as dramatic as many of the experiments that have made up the station's work. While the conference is sponsored by the Iowa state council for child study and parent education, the program is under the direction of the Iowa child welfare research station and the University's extension division.

An epoch-making chapter in Iowa history, the story of the movement for establishment of the Child Welfare station begins with "a woman with a vision." This woman, Mrs. Cora Bussey Hillis of Des Moines, envisioned a "science of child rearing." The foundation work that she inspired has resulted after more than two decades in that very thing.

Mrs. Hillis was a prominent woman, active in the community life of Des Moines. She was responsible for many developments in pioneer child welfare activities.

Faced with her own problems of rearing children, and realizing that there was no standard, no science, she could call on for assistance, she developed a vision of the guidance work that is now being offered.

What did she believe was the necessary development? In her own words, Mrs. Hillis outlined: "Give the normal child the same scientific study by research methods that we give to crops and cattle. Study his inheritance, racially, physically, temperamentally, and socially; his prenatal development, infancy, childhood, adolescence, and youth. Learn how the normal child develops in body, mind, and spirit and gradually evolve a science of child rearing by accumulated, comparative data and by intensive study of selected groups carried on through the years under natural conditions and in a controlled environment."

Mrs. Hillis and her associates labored for 16 years to convince educational and political leaders of the soundness of her plan. At times, the defeat was heartbreaking. But the campaign was continued with a vigor and faith that was typical of the line of staunch men and women from which Mrs. Hillis descended.

At first, the plan was offered to Iowa State college officials. They found it impossible to accept. Later, it was offered to presidents of the university. One of them, in response to Mrs. Hillis' pleas, showed a strange type of vision: "There is a great work you can do for this university, Mrs. Hillis, if you want to work," he told her. "You can get us a set of chimneys in a campaign to ring out over the campus."

Finally, a new president of the university, Dr. Thomas H. Macbride, became interested. He called in Dean Carl E. Seashore, then of the graduate college. In the words of Mrs. Hillis, Dean-Emeritus Seashore "took this vagrant child of mine to his heart and thereafter literally fathered it."

In 1915 the first child welfare bill was defeated in the state legislature. A second campaign began, and in 1917 the bill was approved. The station thus came into existence. In the years since there have been many landmarks. The first 10 years saw the main lines of research and service well laid down under the direction of the late Dr. Bird T. Baldwin. A $50,000 grant from the Iowa W.C.T.U. assisted in expansion of the station's work in its early years.

Large grants from the Laura Spelman Rockefeller memorial became available, and supplemented the state appropriations so that the work became ever more expanded. In 1938 the Rockefeller aid came to an end—the station is supported now by the state fund alone.

This is the station which is the motivating force behind the conference meeting here this week. This is the realization of the vision of Mrs. Cora Bussey Hillis.

Remedy For Overcrowding Is Needed

ON VARIOUS occasions, when lectures have taken place in either the house or senate chamber of Old Capitol, it has been called to our attention that the auditorium was too small.

When events attract a larger crowd than the chambers can seat, the condition is annoying to those who stand in the doorway or hall. Yesterday's symposium on regionalism was before a crowd that was too large for the comfort of those who sat on the "fringe."

Perhaps these events draw larger crowds than are planned on, but with the popularity of some of the events, such as writers' workshop lectures, we believe those in charge should give more careful consideration to the choice of a meeting place.

Finland Stands Unique

LAST WEEK when the nation's capital reported war debt payments one nation stood out among the rest. Finland, unique for her regular payments on U. S. loans, has won the favorable opinion of the American public and has given herself publicity for which she couldn't have paid.

One of the few countries to emerge from the post-war period strong, solvent and unbeset by the many evils affecting most nations, Finland has gained international prominence.

Her culture is reflected in the music of Sibelius; her athletes like Kolehmainen and Nurmi have shown the world another side of Finnish life.

In 1917 the Finns took advantage of the Russian revolution to declare their independence. Finland has increased her strength continuously. Prospects for her continued development are bright.

As a stronghold of democracy Finland looks to play an increasingly prominent part in world affairs. The Finns can not soon forget many years of foreign domination. They know the price of freedom is high, but have shown their willingness to pay it.

What did she believe was the necessary development? In her own words, Mrs. Hillis outlined:

"Give the normal child the same scientific study by research methods that we give to crops and cattle. Study his inheritance, racially, physically, temperamentally, and socially; his prenatal development, infancy, childhood, adolescence, and youth. Learn how the normal child develops in body, mind, and spirit and gradually evolve a science of child rearing by accumulated, comparative data and by intensive study of selected groups carried on through the years under natural conditions and in a controlled environment."

U. S. Supreme Court Looks New Deal-ish For Years to Come

By CHARLES P. STEWART

Although President Roosevelt lost his fight in congress to reorganize the federal supreme court, he has quite effectively reorganized it nevertheless. Four of the members of the bench when the "nine old men" (not now nearly as old, on an average, as they were) adjourned for the summer a few days ago, were his own appointees. Of the other five, there have been moderately good liberals all along. Only two of the original die-hard conservatives remain.

And it isn't improbable that the present White House tenant will have the naming of at least one out of this pair before the end of his current term—not to mention the possibility that he'll get a third lease on the executive mansion. If that happens, it's likely enough that, before 1945, he'll have chosen the court's entire personnel.

Upon F. D.'s initial inauguration, there's no question that the high tribunal was, on the whole, too conservative for his taste. It knocked out some of his new deal measures, and foreclosed in advance against others that he'd have advocated if he hadn't realized that they'd be judicially blocked as unconstitutional, if enacted.

Since then, however, he's had those four vacancies to fill. True, he didn't score four gains. Justices Holmes (dead) and Brandeis (resigned) were as loyal liberals as he could have desired. He put other liberals in their places, but he could claim only two actual acquisitions.

Today's Line-up Today the Rooseveltian selections on the bench are Justices Black, Frankfurter, Reed and Douglas.

It can be assumed, that they suit the new deal down to the ground. Additionally there are Chief Justice Hughes and Justices McReynolds, Butler, Stone and Roberts.

Early in his career, Chief Justice Hughes, as an insurance investigator, classed as a very turbulent reformer. Some of this activity wore off later on, but he can't be said ever to have been a reactionary. Justice McReynolds is a curiosity. President Wilson appointed him on the theory that he was well to the "left." He turned out decidedly to the "rightward" instead. He and Justice Butler have been the two worst thorns in the new deal's ribs. There's talk to the effect that McReynolds is soon to resign. If he does, Butler will be left as the lone old-guardian—and, in the course of nature, HE can't last indefinitely. As to Chief Justice Hughes?—whether considered as a liberal or a conservative, he's 75 and was so ill as to be bed-ridden when the court adjourned.

Justice Stone, a Coolidge appointee, who ought to have been extremely conservative, has been middling liberal. Justice Roberts, not quite as liberal as Justice Stone, has been fairly so also.

What Have We? We have, then: Justices Black, Frankfurter, Reed and Douglas, rampagous new dealers—provided that none of them flops, as Justice McReynolds did.

Chief Justice Hughes, once extremely liberal but only conservatively so at the present writing.

Justice Stone as 60 per cent liberal, and Justice Roberts as 50-50.

Justices McReynolds and Butler, as away to the right.

And finally, the consideration that, Chief Justice Hughes and Justices McReynolds and Butler are on the verge of the grave—with new appointments (by President Roosevelt?) ahead to succeed them.

F. D.'s Triumph Where F. D. wins out is here: What he wanted to do was to make the supreme court a rather transitory body. If he'd had his way, it wouldn't have lasted long enough to prevent his successor (maybe an anti-new dealer) from changing its complexion completely. But the defeat of his plan has kept it in semi-perpetuity.

Suppose his successor in the White House is an anti-new dealer. He still will have a hold-over pro-new deal supreme court on his hands, to crab ANTI-new deal readjustments, by pronouncing them unconstitutional.

F. D.'s system has been kinda frozen into permanency by his unintentional failure to provide an easily changeable supreme court.

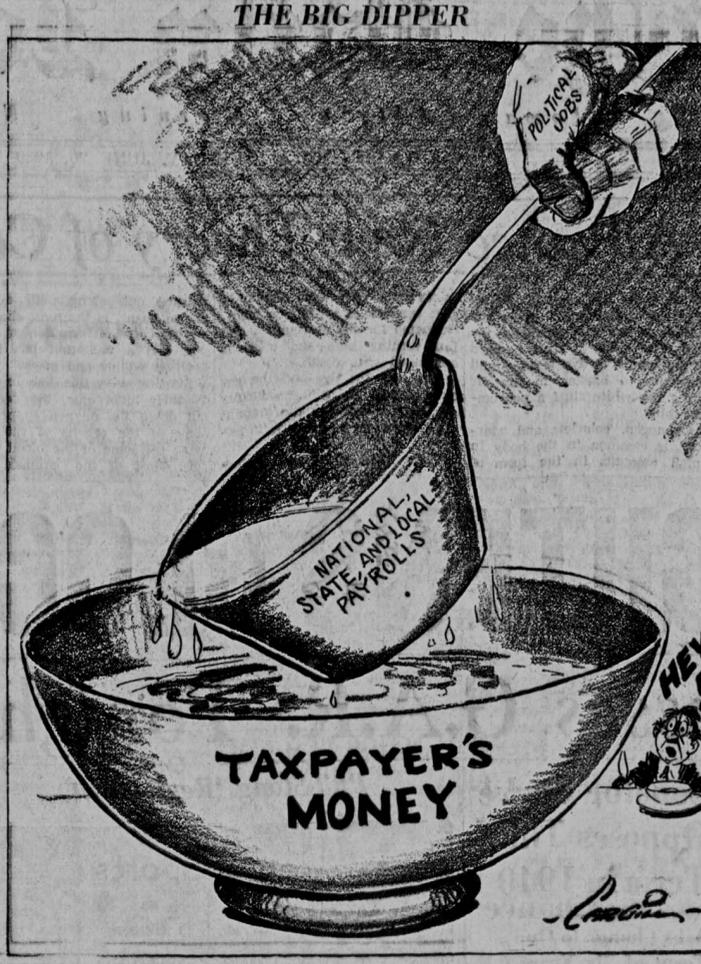

Not all women are crazy about bargain sales. A lot of 'em you know, are clerks.

Good sportsmanship is what we believe in — provided it doesn't cost our side the game.

An astrologer says he sees prosperity in the skies. But, gosh, we don't live up there — not yet, anyway.

A rising young surgeon of my acquaintance tells me that he can, by means of the peritoneoscope, differentiate between cirrhosis of the liver and congestion of the liver; that he can see cancer of the stomach and intestine, and that he can see through the peritoneoscope particular conditions in the female pelvis which would indicate whether further operation is necessary.

A MAN ABOUT MANHATTAN

By George Tucker

NEW YORK.—An experiment in jungle dentistry has in no sense discouraged Otis Lloyd, a trainer at Frank Buck's wild animal camp out on Long Island, even though it went somewhat awry.

Several years ago, Lloyd made the headlines when a giant python curled around his body, crushed his chest and left him temporarily blind. Then, last summer, a diamond-back rattler bit him and he almost died.

This summer it's been the python again. For several days the 27-foot reptile had been moping around with an infected tooth. Seizing his chance, Lloyd was ready to clamp down on the tooth when the python sank 72-needle sharp teeth into his left hand.

Said Lloyd, later: "It's all in the day's fun. And besides, turn-about is fair play. Almost every day I go in there and catch that python barehanded. Today he caught me barehanded."

"The infected tooth?" "It's still in there," admitted the trainer, "but I'll get it in a couple of days."

Sometimes people need medical attention in a hurry. Especially is the availability of a good hospital only about 24 hours, which is a great saving of time over an exploratory laparotomy.

And there is a saving in expense. Surgeons have an undeservedly bad reputation for expensive charges. A friend of mine told me of taking his nephew to the greatest surgeon who ever lived—Joseph Lister. When the consultation was over the question was asked, "How much do I owe you?" Dr. Lister replied, "Oh! five dollars, but if that is burdensome, whatever is convenient."

I have found that the best surgeons, as well as the best physicians, charge the least.

HEALTH HINTS

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Surgeons are periscope-minded. They have learned to put an electric light on the end of a steel rod, and there is practically no place on the inside of the human body that they can't see. The latest thing is what is known as a peritoneoscope, which is used to look into the inside of the abdomen. In order to operate this instrument they have to make a hole in the abdomen, but that never bothered a surgeon.

In the old days surgeons used to do what was known as an exploratory laparotomy, by which was meant that the surgeon made an incision into the abdomen and went in to look around to see whether there was anything the matter with you.

When you came out of the anesthetic, the surgeon always told you that there was something the matter with you.

Takes Its Place The peritoneoscope takes the place of this. Instead of an exploratory laparotomy with a hole in the abdomen big enough to put his hand in the surgeon makes a small incision and inserts the metal tube, turns on the light and examines the inside of the abdomen.

I looked in one once and all I saw was something that resembled a Neon light in front of a movie, but one glance into the peritoneoscope doesn't make an expert diagnostician. I really am inclined to believe that the surgeons see what they say they do, and that the procedure might eliminate a good deal of pain, suffering and distress — physical and mental.

A rising young surgeon of my acquaintance tells me that he can, by means of the peritoneoscope, differentiate between cirrhosis of the liver and congestion of the liver; that he can see cancer of the stomach and intestine, and that he can see through the peritoneoscope particular conditions in the female pelvis which would indicate whether further operation is necessary.

One of the most profoundly interesting books I ever read is the United States Navy's escape manual for men and officers on submarines. The recent under-the hospital only about 24 hours, which is a great saving of time over an exploratory laparotomy. And there is a saving in expense. Surgeons have an undeservedly bad reputation for expensive charges. A friend of mine told me of taking his nephew to the greatest surgeon who ever lived—Joseph Lister. When the consultation was over the question was asked, "How much do I owe you?" Dr. Lister replied, "Oh! five dollars, but if that is burdensome, whatever is convenient."

I have found that the best surgeons, as well as the best physicians, charge the least.

Regionalism Becomes Topic For 'Workshop' Symposium

"If I should write favorably about Robert E. Lee, I would be called a regionalist, if I wrote about him depreciatively, I would be called a realist, and if I wrote about him impersonally I would be called a universalist," said Donald Davidson, foremost southern exponent of regionalism, defending the literature of the south and middle west from the dictums of the American literary capital, New York, in the symposium on regionalism of the writers' workshop in the senate chamber of Old Capitol.

Phil Stong, John T. Frederick and Davidson, three famous American "regionalists," discussed that topic yesterday afternoon. Wallace Stegner, young author of "Remembering Laughter," and Herbert Krause, young author of "Wind Without Rain," participated in the discussion which followed. Both are Iowa graduates.

Prof. Norman Foerster, head of the school of letters, introduced the visiting authors, defining "regionalism" as a literary expression of part of the country, such as the south, middle west and New England. "Regionalism," he said, confronts us with such questions as whether it enlarges or restricts a writer, whether it encourages provincialism and whether it helps face the problems of decadent realism and naturalism.

Davidson asserted that the word "regionalist" should be used with reservations and that in many cases it is confused with "provincialism," which is a reproach.

By Staff Writer

"I would rather be called a sectionalist or separatist than a regionalist, for they are more virile words. Regionalist is a 'sissy' word and very often used only as a label," Davidson continued, "isms" never get below the surface and that "regionalism" has come to have a limited connotation.

The so-called regionalists of the south, which are not regionalists in the true sense of the word, said Davidson, are those who write of frustrated southerners, Negroes and hill billies to supply the markets of New York, much in the same way that colonies used to supply raw materials to the imperial government.

Members of the second group, or true regionalists, are those who, on their own terms, participate in the arts, he said.

Davidson pointed out that today's poet does not play the ancient roles of bard, prophet, wise man and scientist as the pre-Renaissance poet did. Too often the poet of today thinks of himself as the "poet versus the world" rather than a "poet of the world."

This has led to diseases of modern literature, although Davidson stated that the middle west and south are outside the cosmopolitan influence and so are less subject to these diseases. A writer should use the style that is most adequate to his needs, he remarked. A poet should conform to tradition at first and work up to the highly stylized forms of writing, rather than begin with them.

"You have," said Davidson, "here in the middle west an abundance of subject matter. In the books we remember, the author has his eyes on his subject and moves with his characters and the characters move with him."

John T. Frederick, editor of the old "Midland," paid tribute to Edwin Ford Piper who he said wrote fine regional literature and created an audience for it.

Regionalism has an element of the religious, Frederick stated. Regionalism has a creed and policy just as religion has.

"The creed is simple: Regionalists are honest men," said Frederick.

"American Prefaces," edited by Prof. Wilbur Schramm, is one of the finest magazines of today in the field of creative literature, according to Frederick.

Frederick went on to say that no true regionalist can afford to pass over the opportunity to bring the ideas of the university closer to Iowa people and contemporary literature through the newspapers, radio and the schools.

Phil Stong admitted he was curious about the formal term "regionalism."

"Setting, action, architecture and thesis are the guides," he pointed out.

Stong said these four were essentially the same about whatever region one may write.

Experience Teaches Tibbett Famous Baritone Found Life Tough But Improved Through Hardships

The school of life has been a hard one for Lawrence Tibbett, famous American baritone who will be heard at the University of Iowa field house July 19 at 8:15 p.m., yet it has been his best teacher.

Brilliant successes have not affected him; always he is ready with sympathy for others who tread the tortuous path which was once his, before the glorious present dawned upon him.

"I was lucky in being born with a good voice," confesses Tibbett, "but that alone wasn't enough to carry me through. Added to the voice, thank God, was a passionate love of music, and my enthusiasm, instead of waning with accomplishment, increased year by year. I would rather sing than do anything else on earth.

"In this good world are many gracious persons who believe that a good voice is a thing to be cultivated and nourished and who, with sympathy, almost unbelievable, over and over again put new strength into my backbone.

"At times I crawled on bloody hands and knees toward my goal; I slaved, I sacrificed, I fought and died a hundred deaths. But for that I deserve not one cheer. Hundreds of thousands of men have struggled harder than I to achieve an ambition and every one of them has suffered more than I.

"These were just a few of my experiences: doing whatever my voice could find to do, in church choirs, light opera, moving picture theaters; of being near to conviction because I could not meet the rent; then, there was that most crucial time of all, when I borrowed on my life insurance, all I had, that I might go to New York and get the final studies I needed to put me on a higher plane. That was a crisis of harrowing uncertainty.

"Hard struggles and experience, always leave their mark on a man's mind. He thinks more deeply; he has broader views; he has a stronger fellow feeling for humanity. These are the things that experience and struggle brought to me."

Council Rejects Bids Received On Morningside Project

July 10 Set As Deadline For New Bids

Legal Technicality Held Responsible For Council Action

Members of the city council passed a motion to reject all bids received yesterday afternoon on the $2,896.67 contract for the sidewalk paving project in Morningside addition at a meeting last night in the council chambers.

The motion also provided for the returning of the certified checks to all bidders, and instructed the city clerk to advertise for new bids to be opened at 2 o'clock July 10 in the city clerk's office. An extension of 16 days, to Aug. 31, was made as the finishing date for the project.

Legal technicalities were responsible for the action of the council on the sidewalk project. Work on the project was originally to have been begun July 4 and completed Aug. 15, according to the resolution concerning the paving, which was passed by the city council May 29.

Fred Gartzke, city engineer, told the council that the delay in starting the paving would not hinder its completion before school starts this fall.

The city engineer, at a meeting of the council May 5, when the council passed the resolution of necessity for the sidewalks, said that it would be necessary for the city council to install sidewalks along College street before the new high school building is placed in use this fall.

Sidewalks to be paved in the undertaking are on either side of College street from Fairview street east to Morningside drive where the grounds for the new $750,000 Iowa City high school building are located.

Of the total estimated cost of the Morningside sidewalk installation, the city will pay $418.69 for the paving of approaches and for the excavation work. Owners of the adjoining properties will be assessed for the remainder of the cost.

Christmas Seal Sale Was Good

Check of Proceeds Reveals That Locals Bought More Seals

Johnson county, whose residents purchased an average of 4.99 seals in the 1938 Christmas seal sale, helped make this sale the first to exceed $100,000 in Iowa since 1930, the Iowa Tuberculosis association revealed yesterday.

The sale in Iowa totaled $102,000, a gain of 4 per cent over the preceding year when the total was $98,068.72, the report stated. The state per capita in 1938 was 4 cents, less than the Johnson county average.

The county proceeds in the 1938 sale were $1,684.03 and the 1937 sale was $1,716.73, the association revealed.

In issuing the summary the association stated, "The substantial increase in the 1938 sale of Christmas seals is resultant in enlarged and intensified work throughout Iowa to teach people the facts about tuberculosis and its prevention, to find cases early, and to obtain treatment promptly."
